Any Good Bonds?
O. H. Kahn, Interpreter.
Useful Skyscrapers.
Britain Saves Oil.

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

HAVE you any good bonds, representing real value with plenty to spare. If so, Dr. Friday, deep economist, says don't sell them. The supply of capital is increasing faster than the supply of good bonds. Consequently, bonds will go higher. But this means GOOD bonds.

OTTO H. KAHN must utter certain platitudes, such as "always be first at the office, last to leave, and never look at the clock." But unlike some others, he also says things worth while. For instance, "the ancients had a saying, 'those whom the gods love, die young.' I interpret that to mean that one should remain young until the hour of passing comes."

THAT new interpretation is correct. The best men die young, because they never grow old. "Every child is a genius, every genius is a child."

Wagner, Tolstoy, Goethe, were young when they died in old age. Pope Leo, when this writer saw him celebrating his jubilee, in Michael Angelo's magnificent church in Rome, had the smile of a child, although he was past eighty, his thin face almost transparent.

THIS about skyscrapers may change the foolish opinion that would limit their height.

A tall skyscraper protects from lightning buildings near it. New York's Woolworth Building, for instance, protects all buildings within a radius of eleven hundred feet square around it.

THE World Building, recently struck by lightning, would not have been struck had it been 200 feet nearer the Woolworth Building—that is, assuming it was not an intentional act of Providence. This should make it easy to protect oil tanks by grouping them around high steel masts, copper sheathed, for greater conductivity.

NEWS from Great Britain, encouraging for speculators in oil stocks, is bad for the United States as a whole.

The British seek to dominate the world's oil supply. This first plan, very intelligent, is to "drain the United States supply."

BRITAIN conserves and saves oil where she controls the land above it, and urges buying and using up the United States oil supply.

If that continues it will settle the question of our "oil surplus" in a fashion disturbing to owners of big and little motor cars.

It is fortunate our navy succeeded in keeping part of its own oil reserves. Let's HOPE that won't be drained.

THE Rev. Dr. Straton, arriving in California for a debate on evolution, finds a trend away from religious faith and respects for laws of God, or man, especially in the young. Consequently, "the future of our nation, and our race is threatened."

DR. STRATON defies science to produce one fact substantiating the scientific truth of evolution.

The scientists ask Dr. Straton to produce one fact substantiating the scientific truth of Eve's creation from Adam's rib. They say every man has the same number of ribs on each side.

SUCH discussions are fruitless. Religions have gradually changed for a thousand centuries, as men's knowledge has increased and their civilization improved. Our Christian religion once burned men alive, for saying the earth is round and goes around the sun. After men had sailed around the earth, religion changed its opinion.

It will change in many respects. It no longer emphasizes Bible texts saying it is all right to have slaves, and just how to bore holes in their ears, as a sign of perpetual servitude.

BUT changes do not diminish the power of religion, which is as necessary to men as air and water. Every man not wilfully ignorant knows the earth is millions of years old, that the animals were here millions of years before man appeared. Why insist on childish falsehood, to bolster religion, which needs no such childish, obviously false bolstering.

THE Bible does not tell us to shut our eyes. It says: "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good." That means investigate everything. Also, you shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. Truth never hurt anything good, religion least of all.

EARNEST BOYD, clever Irishman, writer and critic, says "The Southern states are not Yankee and never will be. The South resembles the North no more than England resembles Spain."

Mr. Boyd would cut the United States into three nations, North, South and West, because men cannot be "genuinely patriotic over a whole continent."

MR. BOYD'S idea is not new. Wise ancient Greeks said a nation couldn't survive unless all the citizens could gather in the public square and hear their chief men speak. Newspapers and radio have adjusted that.

A MAN raising grapefruit in Miami and a man driving dogs in Alaska, don't find their country too big. They are proud of their 48 states, working in free co-operation, and would advise Europe to go and do the same.

THE young murderer, Hickman, who kidnaped a girl 12 years old, killed her and sold her mutilated body to her father for $1,500, shouted to the reporters as he started for San Quentin Prison,

SECRETARY VIRILE, CALM AT ATTACKS ON BIRTHDAY

Treasury Head in Good Health Despite Age—Accepts Onslaughts Calmly.

Seven Stormy Years Fail to Flurry Shy Cabinet Officer In Trying Financial Era.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—(AP.)—Apparently in excellent health and as determined as ever to stick to the post he has held for seven stormy and eventful years, Andrew Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, today observed his seventy-third birthday.

Entering the Harding cabinet at the age of 66, the distinguished Pittsburgh millionaire banker and business man soon found himself the butt of repeated attacks from Democrats and Republican irregulars in Congress, but through it all he calmly steered the nation through the trying period of post-war financial reconstruction.

SHY AND RETIRING

Today, after weathering verbal barrages over his policies on taxation, prohibition enforcement, soldiers' bonus, war debt settlements, and farm relief, the shy and retiring cabinet officer was sitting tight in his plainly-furnished office close to the White House, unflinchingly waiting for the next scene in the latest drama on Capitol Hill revolving around his official head.

That is the move made by Senator Couzens, of Michigan, another millionaire Republican, and long a foe of the oldest member of the Coolidge official family, to place the Senate on record as favoring the resignation of Mr. Mellon.

An old complaint over taxation and other things, but dressed up with impressions from the Secretary's recent testimony in the oil investigation, it, like all the rest, is expected to be ignored by the quiet, little man in the gray stone building "at the other end of the avenue" whom many call the financial genius of the age.

Burglars Loot Elks' Club at Bellefonte

BELLEFONTE, Pa., March 24.—(AP.)—Burglars last night broke into the Bellefonte Lodge of Elks and stole $100 in cash, three slot machines and an electric lathe. Entrance was gained through the main door with a key. The cash register was smashed to obtain the money. The lodge has quarters in what was once the home of Pennsylvania's famous war governor, Andrew G. Curtin, in the heart of the town.

Beaver Invalid Saves Sister from Flames

BEAVER FALLS, Pa., March 24.—Confined to her bed with a heart ailment, Jessie Shroder, 18, dashed to her sister's aid when the latter was enveloped in flames. Both were seriously burned. Mildred Shroder, 16, 1618 Sixth avenue, was burned about the back, abdomen and lower portion of her body when her dress ignited from the kitchen stove. Her sister's act probably saved her life.

BRAND KLAN PLOT TREASON

Shellproof at 73

HAS BIRTHDAY—Secretary of the Treasury Andrew W. Mellon was 73 yesterday. Commenting on this fact, an Associated Press dispatch from Washington yesterday said: "Mentally virile and in good physical trim despite this ripe age, the treasury head indicated that he had no intention of leaving the cabinet. His foes have tried by repeated attacks to force him to resign—attacks in the Sinclair oil bond case, in the huge Vare election fund probe, in the Senate's investigation of conditions at the Pittsburgh Coal Company's camps and in the handling of tax refunds—but their hottest shots have found him shellproof. Despite his seven stormy years in Washington, Secretary Mellon still retains his calm and shy manner, and is known as the most retiring man in the cabinet."

FOWNES DIES UNDER KNIFE

William Clark Fownes, 70, formerly vice president of the Standard Seamless Tube Company, died Saturday afternoon at the Mayo Hospital, Rochester, Minn., after an operation. He was an uncle of W. C. Fownes, Jr., celebrated golfer.

Since the death of his wife a year ago he had lived at the Pittsburgh Athletic Association and two weeks ago went to Rochester for an operation.

He was a brother of H. C. Fownes and Edwin S. Fownes, and leaves two children, Mrs. Ray Gilday of Baltimore and Henry G. Fownes of Pittsburgh. He was a member of the Duquesne, Oakmont and Harrisburg country clubs.

Interment will be on Tuesday from the residence of his son, 5922 Howe street.

LAY 3 FIRES TO FIRE BUG HERE

A pyromaniac is believed to have instigated three rubbish blazes within 90 minutes in downtown alleys Saturday night while streets were crowded.

Fire Capt. John H. Callahan said all three blazes were alike, the first, in an alley between Penn and Liberty avenues above Sixth street; the second, a few minutes later, in Garrison way, near Penn avenue, and the third following shortly in Montour way, near Strawberry way.

Callahan said an investigation would be started immediately. The total damage, due to quick action, did not exceed $100.

Distribute Mellett Reward Monday

CANTON, O., March 24.—Distribution of the Don Mellett reward fund will be announced Monday, March 26, according to Common Pleas Judges A. W. Agler and Charles Krichbaum, who have had charge of that angle of the case. More than $24,000 has actually been collected. Indications are that Steve Kascholk, Nant-y-Glo, Pa., and William Betzler, of Massillon, both of whom were prominent in the Mellett trials, will get the biggest share, with nearly all claimants getting something.

Reward Spurs Hunt For Theater Slayers

PHILADELPHIA, March 24.—(AP.)—Spurred by the offer of a $1,000 reward, police tonight combed the city for three automobile slayers who last night shot and killed Max T. Harrison, theater manager, in an unsuccessful attempt to rob him of a bag containing $700. The reward was offered by the Stanley Company of America, owners of the theater where Harrison was employed, for the arrest and conviction of the slayers.

"BLACK BOX" DISCLOSES EVIDENCE

Startling Revelations Made By Papers in Possession of Former Ind. Grand Dragon.

Persons Nationally Prominent May Be Liable to Prosecution for Treason.

Universal Service.

KOKOMO, Ind., March 24.—A gigantic plot to overthrow the United States government was outlined among the papers found in the famous "black boxes" of D. C. Stephenson, former state grand dragon of the order.

This information was announced today by Prosecutor Homer R. Miller.

LIABLE FOR TREASON

"This evidence," he stated, "may render persons nationally prominent liable to prosecution for treason."

The prosecutor was authorized by the Howard county grand jury to spare no effort in obtaining further information in connection with the plot against the government.

The next grand jury, Prosecutor Miller announced, will be convened on April 9.

In closing its term, the jury issued a report, reading in part:

"Members of this grand jury have listened to the very amazing tale of violations of the criminal statutes of Indiana in connection with the American Trust Company and other banks as related by one David C. Stephenson.

"This grand jury does not feel that indictments should be returned against any individual on the testimony of David C. Stephenson and on no further corroborating evidence or circumstance than has been presented to us.

WILL SIFT STORY

"We recommend that the prosecuting attorney, Homer R. Miller, make a complete and exhaustive investigation of the story related by David C. Stephenson relative to the criminal law violations in this county, and that in the event that the facts can be found corroborating this story they are laid before a grand jury at the next term of the court, and then that this investigation be continued.

"We feel that the story related by David C. Stephenson is such as to warrant a full and complete investigation on the part of this county and that it should be sifted to the very bottom in order to ascertain whether it is the truth."

Willis Says Hoover Is "Wet" Candidate

Arrest "Heroine"

FACES COURT—With 10 members of the cast of "The Captive," Ann Davis, heroine in the play, will face court in Los Angeles Monday on charges of presenting an improper play. Miss Davis and other performers were taken into custody last night by police after an injunction preventing police interference had expired. The producers were arrested Wednesday.

ORDER ARREST OF CUNNINGHAM

WASHINGTON, March 24.—Thomas W. Cunningham, reluctant witness in the Pennsylvania primary investigation, was ordered placed under arrest for contempt by unanimous vote of the Senate today.

Sergeant at Arms Barry, or one of his subordinates, will go immediately to Philadelphia to arrest Cunningham. When haled before the Senate, he will again be asked the disputed questions. If he again fails to answer, he can be sent to jail for an indefinite term. He has recourse in court to stay the Senate action, however.

Cunningham was clerk of the Court of Quarter Sessions, Philadelphia, and, according to his testimony, made only $8,000 a year salary when he made the Vare contribution.

FLIER, STUDENT KILLED IN FALL

CHILLICOTHE, O., March 24.—(AP.)—Wallace Goldsberry, 22, and Everet Depew, 20, local residents, were killed this afternoon when Goldsberry's airplane nose-dived from a low altitude near Hopetown, about two mile north of here.

Goldsberry, pilot and owner of the plane, and Depew, a painter and student aviator, had taken off from the farm on which they crashed only a few minutes before the accident.

Mexican Bandits Rob 100 Motor Travelers

MEXICO CITY, March 24.—(AP.)—Bandits of the Cole Younger type this afternoon held up 15 automobiles, lined up 100 travelers, and methodically stripped them of their valuables at a point on the Mexico City-Puebla Highway only 25 miles from the capital.

ROCKEFELLER MAY HELP ON BILL TO END COAL STRIKE

Senate Probers Hope to Push Measure Through Present Congress Session.

Watson Prepares Second Letter Inviting Gov. Fisher to Testify at Quiz.

International News Service.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and Charles M. Schwab may be called again before the Senate coal committee at a proposed joint conference of operators and miners to draft regulatory legislation for the coal industry.

Committee members indicated today that the aid of the two industrial leaders would be enlisted in obtaining recommendations. The committee hopes to start working on a coal bill as soon as the present hearings are concluded, perhaps in two or three weeks.

Senator Gooding (R.) of Idaho, announced an effort would be made to push it through this session.

RECESS OVER WEEK-END

Both Rockefeller and Schwab agreed that some form of legislation would be helpful to the industry. The oil man declared consolidations were essential to eliminate overproduction and said this probably could be effected only through federal assistance.

The committee recessed over the week-end. At Rockefeller's request it will examine on Monday Consolidation Coal Company officials. Rockefeller asked that the company be given an opportunity to reply to union charges.

The committee issued subpenas today for the following Ohio operators to appear Wednesday:

They were requested to furnish full information on production, number of men employed, costs and average selling price of coal each year from 1924 to 1927.

Senator Watson, Republican, of Indiana, chairman, today prepared a second letter inviting Gov. John S. Fisher, of Pennsylvania, to testify at his convenience.

OHIO OPERATORS PROTEST

WASHINGTON, March 24.—(AP.)—A protest against the system followed by the United Mine Workers in presenting their case in the Senate committee investigation of the bituminous industry was registered with Chairman Watson of that committee today by Ohio operators.

With the inquiry in recess until Monday, William P. Belden, counsel for the Ohio Operators' Association, formally requested Watson to admonish union counsel to follow a more orderly procedure. The Indiana Senator assured them that this would be done, said Belden later, and that he union representatives would be requested to confine their attention to one of the states cited in the Johnson resolution at a time. These are Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia.

W. R. Woodford, Cleveland, president of the Rail and River Coal Company, and R. L. Ireland, Cleveland, general manager of the M. A. Hanna Coal Company, accompanied Belden.

Smith Challenged on Sinclair Relations

WASHINGTON, March 24.—(AP.)—Gov. Smith of New York was assailed in the Senate today by Senator Robinson (R.) Indiana, for retaining Harry F. Sinclair as racing commissioner of New York during the investigation of his lease of Teapot Dome naval oil reserve and the subsequent cancellation of the lease.

Asserting in the Senate that Smith had appointed Sinclair as racing commissioner in June, 1920, in the midst of his campaign, Robinson asked that "in the next letter Gov Smith writes, let him explain thoroughly to the American people his full relations with Harry Sinclair."

Robinson said that despite the letter of Gov Smith disavowing any campaign contribution by Sinclair, investigations since the letter was written have shown that Sinclair contributed in both 1918 and in 1926 to the New York Democratic fund, which he described as the "Tammany fund."

"Anyone who would write a letter such as Gov Smith wrote," he said, referring to Smith's strictures on himself and Chairman Nye, of the oil committee, "would, if placed in the White House, embroil us with foreign nations in a short time. A man of the temperament revealed by that letter is not safe to guide the destinies of the nation."

Robinson complained that nowhere in his letter did Gov Smith say that he had appointed Sinclair. He declared the Governor had actually named Sinclair twice as racing commissioner in 1920, once to fill out a term and again for a full five-year

Mine Men Here Mum On Rockefeller Plan

Pittsburgh operators and mine union officials display deep interest, but equal disinclination to discuss, John D. Rockefeller's four suggestions to stabilize the coal industry. Mr. Rockefeller proposed that the Senate and committee meet with representatives of the operators, and tackle:

First, the fundamental problem of over-production.

That they next take up with the railroads the matter of transportation and freight rates; that the question of distribution and markets be dealt with next at a conference with the large distributors, and that finally the representatives of the miners be called in, and consideration given to "the largest, and most important, and most difficult of all the problems—that of labor and wages."

Horace F. Baker, president, Pittsburgh Terminal Coal Corporation, expressed himself in entire accord with the first three suggestions by Mr. Rockefeller.

"If the settlement of those three will develop a natural solution to the labor problem, I likewise will indorse it," he said.

C. E. Lesher, executive vice president, Pittsburgh Coal Company, and Patrick T. Fagan, president, District No. 5, United Mine Workers of America, declined to comment.

"Mr. Rockefeller," Mr. Lesher said, "evidently has spent much time in arriving at these conclusions. I would hesitate, therefore, to express an unreflected opinion."

CONFER— Sergt. William Jones and Chief Deputy Sheriff A. D. Edsall talk over things at Maude mine, where strikers continue picketing despite sheriff's orders.

ORGANIZERS—Emil Phillips (left) and Sam Cuddy, union organizers, transact a little private business on the picket line. Cuddy, an international board man of the United Mine Workers, has been sent in to Treveskyn from Avella. Orderly conduct on the part of the miners so far has forstalled further arrests.

ON WATCH— Privates Samuel May and James Brooks, Washington, Pa., detail, keep their eyes peeled for signs of trouble as the pickets hike back and forth in front of the mine.

STRIKE ON!— The strikers walk back and forth along the highway in front of the McClane Mining Company property, occasionally shouting, "Join the Union, boys!" or "Keep away, men! Strike on!" The pickets were orderly Saturday morning and no arrests were made. Sheriff Robert H. Braun has declared a truce until Monday when he will decide what course to pursue in the matter of mass picketing. In the meantime, Maj. Lynn G. Adams, chief of the state police, has come to the Pittsburgh coal fields to take charge of state police activities in person.

'Chutes Save Fliers As Airplane Crashes

International News Service.

QUINCY, Mass., March 24.—Lieut. Walter C. Green, Jr., executive officer of the Squantum Air Port, and Lieut. Samuel Caldwell narrowly escaped death today when their airplane went out of control over the Atlantic section of this city.

As the plane shot earthward, the two airmen jumped with parachutes.

The airplane crashed through the roof of a house, doing considerable property damage.

Meanwhile, Lieut. Green and Lieut. Caldwell soared down. Green landed on the roof of a building and Caldwell came down in the harbor off the Squantum shore.

Lieut. Green was injured, but not seriously. He was taken to Quincy Hospital for treatment. Lieut. Caldwell was unhurt. Small craft, rushing to his aid as he dropped picked him up before his parachute became waterlogged.

200 Girls Face Drab Easter; Mills Close

BELLEFONTE, Pa., March 24.—Expectation of a pre-Easter pay vanishes for 200 girls and half that number of men with the closing of two plants here temporarily. Income Returns Justify Slash Mellon Asserts

WASHINGTON, March 24.

INCOME tax collections already reported to the Treasury from returns of March 15, have given sufficient information to warrant the statement that some tax reduction may be made this year, Secretary Mellon said today after a conference with President Coolidge. He would not discuss the probable size of the cut or the exact figures already reported.

Secretary Mellon said he hoped to have more complete figures on the first quarter's income tax collection next week and then would be able to set a definite figure for the reduction.

C. of C. 'Soft-Pedals' On Anti-Miner Plot

Three thousand words used by the Chamber of Commerce in an article in the current issue of its official organ explaining its stand in the coal situation, fail to mention that the work was financed and carried on by the Pittsburgh Coal Company.

Although nearly three years have passed since the $18,000 campaign was waged by the Chamber's so-called "special industrial aide," it is declared that no final report by the coal committee, setting forth its system of financing, has yet been made to the Chamber's board of directors.

'SOFT-PEDAL" METHODS

"Soft-pedal" methods in handling the coal deal are said to have been responsible for the befuddling of many of the directors. C. E. Lesher, executive vice president of the Pittsburgh Coal Company, first let the cat out of the bag in testimony before the Senate committee. While the directors knew in a general way that E. S. McCullough had been employed to form an organization among the miners, they were not informed specifically as to the scheme of defraying his expenses.

As a result, an inter-chamber quiz is on which, it is said, is likely to have its climax in the annual election of directors which takes place next month. Many of the rank and file of the membership say they will ask for a complete report of the committee, of which J. C. Chaplin was chairman.

The text of the article, covering three closely printed pages of the Chamber's publication, paraphrases the statement made by President T. P. Gaylord on March 12. Referring to the activity of McCullough, it is stated:

"It is not the purpose or within the scope of this article to attempt an explanation of the reasons for the eventual failure of this particular effort to bring about a revival of coal mining in the Pittsburgh district and a restoration of our coal trade to its former proportions.

"Many causes contributed to this failure. The hoped-for resumption of activity at the mines has been brought about in another way. Regrettable as was the failure of the efforts of the special committee of the Chamber, sometimes called the citizens committee, the Pittsburgh district is winning back some of its lost trade, which at the worst period of depression was costing the district $90,000,000 a year."

PROBE AT STANDSTILL

The article is concluded with the following premise:

"As for the Chamber of Commerce and the continuation of the battle which it is evident must go on for a still indefinite period before the right of our miners and operators to compete without the handicaps of outside interference and hurtful discriminations for the markets to which Pittsburgh's natural advantages entitle her, it can be depended upon that the Chamber will do its duty to the community at every juncture as fearlessly as it has done it in the past."

Respecting the continuation of the effort to "do its duty to the community at every juncture as fearlessly as it has done in the past," questions were put to George R. Wallace, chairman, and several members of a committee appointed March 6 to carry on a "neutral" coal survey. Mr. Wallace declared that he "had absolutely nothing to say." Members of the committee said they had never been called together.

POWER TRUST PROBERS FIND $450,000 FUND

Gigantic Sum Reported Used to Influence Legislation. Ex-Senators on Payroll.

By JOHN T. LAMBERT,
Universal Service.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—A fund of $450,000 was raised by the power trust to influence legislation in the present session of Congress, according to discoveries understood to have been made today by the Federal Trade Commission.

Acting under the instructions of a Senate resolution, the commission is understood to have begun an investigation in New York of the books of the joint committee on public utilities and to have found the fund in the accounts of that organization.

SPEND MILLION ON LOBBY

The committee is the official name of the power trust lobby. Nestled in its wing are the National Electric Light Association, already found to have been spending $1,000,000 a year on lobby, propaganda and other activities, and organized groups of gas and street railway associations.

It was organized to get Muscle Shoals, to defeat the Walsh resolution for a Senate investigation of public utility financing and to block the Boulder Canyon dam bill, said by President Coolidge to be absolutely necessary to save the people of the Imperial Valley from the danger of floods from the Colorado River.

Blair Coan, who went out to Montana during the Teapot Dome and Harry Daugherty scandals, to "get something on" Senators Walsh and Wheeler, is said to be among those retained by the joint committee for its lobby work in Washington.

FORMER SENATORS CITED

Out of the joint committee's $450,000 fund is said to come the salaries of former United States Senators Lenroot of Wisconsin and Thomas of Colorado and of others formerly prominent in the affairs of the national government now engaged to influence the activities of Congress.

Much of the fund is said to have been spent for propaganda designed to control public opinion as well as Congress. The committee has deluged Congress and the newspapers with attacks upon the Boulder Canyon dam legislation now before Congress.

It is believed that the $450,000 is separate from the $1,000,000 a year which the National Electric Light Association is spending and from the enormous fund now being sought by Milton W. Harrison, president of the National Association of Railroad and Public Utility Corporations.

The last fund is being raised by solicitation of $1 apiece from public utility security holders throughout the country. Senator Johnson of California declares that if the fund is successful it will be the greatest propaganda or lobby fund ever organized in this country. One of the stated purposes of the fund is to prevent "unsound public discussion."

term. He said Sinclair resigned for his own convenience shortly before the five-year term was up in 1925.

STARTLES SENATE

"During all the period of investigation of Sinclair's infamous negotiations, Gov. Smith never made a move to recall him as racing commissioner," the Indianan continued. "That is in marked contrast to the recent action taken by the Governor of Maryland, also a member of the Democratic party, Mr. Ritchie, who has removed Sinclair's horses from the tracks of that state.

"The only reason I can assign for the New York Governor's action is that he considered Sinclair a very valuable public servant. He must have believed Sinclair was rendering valuable service to his state.

"Sinclair was there in 1924 when Mr. Smith was a candidate for President. Was he supposed to be helping the Governor at that time?"

Robinson startled the Senate a moment later with the statement that he understood that E. L. Doheny, lessee of the Elk Hill (Cal.) reserve, was listed among the delegates slated to support the candidacy of Senator Walsh, of Montana, for the Presidency.

Walsh, Senate prosecutor of the oil cases, rose immediately and asked where the Indianan had received the information.

"From newspaper dispatches," he said.

"I want to say that your information is absolutely false," said Walsh bitingly, adding:

"The list of delegates elected and favorable to my candidacy has been published and the name of Doheny is not on it."

Robinson hesitated and then said that he had made a mistake.

"I had the name of George Creel in mind, I guess," he said.

"But," he went on, "I do understand that William Gibbs McAdoo is a supporter of the Senator's candidacy, and he received $250,000 from Doheny by his own admission."

A. J. (Jack) Hollis Is Called by Death

Andrew J. (Jack) Hollis, 68, veteran Pittsburgh newspaperman, died at his home, 1412 Chelton avenue, Brookline, Saturday morning. He had been connected with the Post-Gazette until stricken with pneumonia four weeks ago.

He leaves his widow, Margaret McDonald Hollis, and three children, James, Anna and Ruth Hollis.

Victim Identifies Robbery Suspect

Arrested on a description by Center avenue police, Jerome King, 22, of 18 Miltenberger street, was identified by Harry Bluestone as one of two men who held up his drug store at 527 Sidy avenue, January 16, and shot him in the chest.

ARREST FIVE IN MINER'S DEATH

CENTERVILLE, Pa., March 24.—Five suspects were taken into custody by Washington county detectives tonight in connection with the death of George Slanovitch, 39, a non-union miner of Clover Hill, employed at the Ritcheyville mine of the Vesta Coal Company, who today was found hammered to death in a field on the West Pike road, three miles from here.

County Detective William B. Dinsmore refused to reveal the identity of the supects, who were taken to Washington. He said he had learned that some union miners threatened Slanovitch because he was working. Disturbances in the vicinity have been reported lately.

The body was found on the Walter Deems farm by Deems.

Slanovitch, an Austrian, and a union miner for 25 years, recently moved to Clover Hill from Castle Shannon. His widow said he had made the move to save his four children, ranging in age from 3 years to 16, from starvation.

Deems, on arising this morning, saw the body lying across a road from his home. Beside it was a bloody pickhandle and the miner's dinnerpail. Apparently he had been struck with a pick and with an ax. Slanovitch, walking from his home to the mine, a distance of about two miles, apparently had taken a short cut across the farm. County detectives believe his assailants laid in wait behind a haystack.

The detectives are searching for two excited N ro boys, who, passing the murdered man's home, called to Mrs. Slanovitch, "The pickets have got your man."

U. S. VICTOR AT ARMS PARLEY

International News Service.

GENEVA, March 24.—The League of Nations preparatory disarmament commission adjourned this afternoon without taking any action upon the British proposals for naval reduction nor the new Soviet Russian proposals for general disarmament by land, sea and air. Both sets of proposals were put over until the next meeting of the commission.

The meeting ended with a victory for the United States. The commission adopted the suggestion of Hugh Gibson, chairman of the United States delegation, that the date of the next meeting be left open until after the various powers have conferred upon the agenda so that greater progress can be made and nonessential discussions avoided.

It was originally planned for the commission to meet in June.

Martin in Common Pleas Court. Mrs. Burkhard made the discovery when Dorothy Ewing, wife No. 1, sued for divorce in Westmoreland county. Mrs. Burkhard's daughter, also shown above, is aged 2.

"boys, they have given me a one-way ticket to the gallows."

The vicious young killer actually considers himself ill-treated, and complained that officers of the law hunting him down "must be hard up for money to want that reward."

HICKMAN should have been disposed of, by life imprisonment or the gallows, the moment his sanity was proved. There was never a doubt of his guilt.

The farce of trying him for another murder was harmful to justice.

Long postponement of punishment, all over the United States, encourages murder. Not hanging, but prompt justice discourages crime.

Owner Is Hunted In Auto Accident

Who was the driver of a new roadster, bearing Pennsylvania license No. 894-174, which crashed into a pole on the Nadine road, Penn township, early Saturday, injuring three of five girl occupants?

His identity is sought by county detectives to clear up circumstances of the accident. The driver carried away the license plates, but not before a passerby observed the number. The car may have been stolen, detectives think. Harrisburg authorities were asked to supply the name of the owner.

The injured girls refused to name the driver. Lillian Todaro, 19, of 6609 Rowan avenue, and Alvera Napolitana, 19, of 6439 Frankstown avenue, are in Pittsburgh Hospital, the former with serious cuts. Alvara's sister, Edith, 17, was dismissed from the hospital soon after being admitted.

HEARST'S SON WEDS IN WEST

By WOOSTER TAYLOR,
Universal Service.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 24.—Miss Alma Virginia Walker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clinton L. Walker, of Piedmont, became the bride of William Randolph Hearst, Jr., today at the Piedmont Community Church.

The chapel was transformed into an orchard bower for the occasion. Fragrant fruit blossoms overhung the aisles and altar, tall tapers burned in a setting of Easter lilies and jonquils, and the embrasures of the church windows were framed in garlands of green.

Bishop Charles Wesley Burns, of the Episcopal Church, an old friend of the Walker family, assisted by the Rev. Ernest F. W. Swan, pastor, performed the ceremony.

The church was filled to overflowing, wedding guests came from all about the bay, and in the entry others were standing, since the pews had long since been filled.

Mayor of Butler Razzed When He "Steals" Auto

Universal Service.

BUTLER, Pa., March 24.—MAYOR GEORGE BOB Wick "stole" an automobile here today and didn't know it. He appropriated by mistake a car that was the same make as his own. The mayor came in for considerable "kidding" as a war against auto thieves is being waged here.

Peru Finds Redfern Plane 'Clue'

IDENTIFICATION OF WRECKAGE NOT DEFINITE

Parts of Airship Picked Up In Stream Believed From American's Craft.

LIMA, Peru, March 24.—(AP.)—The possibility that wreckage of an airplane found in the Apurimac River in Peru may be part of the plane of Paul Redfern, American flier who was lost last year while flying from Brunswick, Ga., to Brazil, has been suggested by a ligh officer of the American naval mission.

First report of the plane wreckage came to the Peruvian Navy Department from the prefect of Apurimac. It was stated that the letters "C. R. P. 4" can be discerned on one of the fragments.

Much confusion as to the identity of the plane exists, some believing that it is the wreckage of a plane lost by a Brazilian scientific expedition in the jungles and others that it is a Bolivian plane, although there have been no reports of such a loss.

The Apurimac, which is more than 500 miles long, is one of the headwaters of the Amazon.

SEIZE BOOZE IN MOOSE CLUBS

Eighteen Western Pennsylvania lodges of the Loyal Order of Moose received a surprise visit Saturday afternoon when federal prohibition agents called to ascertain whether the prohibition law was being violated in the lodges. In six lodges beer or liquor was reported found by the visitors, who seized the alleged contraband and arrested the stewards. They were the same lodges which figured in raids July 20, 1926, soon after John D. Pennington became prohibition administrator. Those raids resulted in 73 lodge officers being placed under two-year paroles when they pleaded no defense in Federal District Court.

Intoxicants were reported found yesterday in the lodges at Braddock, Elizabeth, Donora and East Pittsburgh, and "wildcat" breweries in the lodges at Washington and Tarentum. The lodges at Charleroi, Beechview, Wilmerding, Carnegie, McKees Rocks, New Kensington, Swissvale, Verona and Homestead, received a clean bill of health.

The agents assigned to the East Liberty lodge, 119 Shady avenue, found no one at home and did not gain admittance.

Mate Called Her Slave, Wife Gets Freedom

NORA DARLING, whose husband informed her that she was only his slave, has been divorced from Robert Harry Darling.

According to Mrs. Darling, who lives at 404 Chester avenue, Darling told her that if he wanted his shoes shined, she should shine them. He asserted his status in the home as one who is "lord over all."

In her testimony before Judge Richard W. Martin, who granted the divorce, Mrs. Darling testified that Darling usually was in bed when she went to work; that her husband was lazy and did not work, and that she was tired of being his "slave." Mrs. Darling was represented by Attorney David Turets.

Nab Woman, 5 Men In Tunnel St. Raid

Five men and one woman were arrested when police under Lieutenant John Callan, raided Martin Comerford's cigar store, 59 Tunnel street, and confiscated ten gallons of moonshine Saturday. The liquor, police say, was concealed under the cash register.

Slippery Rock Guards Against More Fires

By L. A. MacDONALD,
Staff Correspondent.

SLIPPERY ROCK, Pa., March 24.—Fire! No other word in any tongue holds such a note of stark terror for the 1,500 residents of this village and the nearly 1,000 students of the State Teachers' College located here.

The fear is well grounded. Recently flames, believed to be the work of pyromaniacs, were discovered in two of the newest and finest buildings at the college. With inadequate fire equipment, men and women students and residents of the town saved the buildings by forming "bucket brigades," subduing the flames after an all-night battle. Four hundred girl students braved the cold and snow for hours to help quench the fires.

A searching probe by state school authorities, state police and town officials failed to fix guilt for the incendiary attempt, but the fact was definitely established that the fires were not accidental.

In the nearly 40 years that the teacher training school has been established in this northern Butler county town, the loss from fire probably has been heavier than that sustained by any community of like population in the United States. Between 1890 and 1898, two of the original buildings of the then Slippery Rock State Normal School, the men's hall and the chapel, were destroyed by fire with a loss of $300,000, and in both cases incendiaries were blamed. In the same period, two main blocks in the business section of the town, valued at $350,000, were destroyed, and again pyromania was given as the cause. Numerous smaller fires in recent years have been attributed to fiends who set brands to gratify the perverted urge for spectacular destruction of property.

Now, With an ambitious building program under way in both the town and the college, borough and school officials are collaborating in providing protection against the menace of fire. The college water supply is being increased ten times over the demand for ordinary use. The town has increased its reservoir capacity and is purchasing fire equipment as modern in type and great in volume as that usually found in cities of 25,000 inhabitants.

The college building program included a number of new buildings, additions to the present structures and expansion of the school facilities to care for 500 more students. The plans call for a new training school, a new and larger gymnasium building, a new amphitheater on the campus; a new heating plant, enlarging of the outdoor hockey field, more tennis courts and a golf course. Work will be started at once on the new training school and by next fall, several of the larger projects will be under way. The expansion program calls for an expenditure of more than $1,000,000.

Dr. J. Linwood Isenberg is president of the college.

Stewart and Johnson Burke.

285 FAMILIES AFFECTED BY COURT RULING

One Company Denied Right To Evict From Non-Operating Pit.

COLUMBUS, O., March 24.—(AP.)—Eviction orders were granted by Federal Judge Benson Hough today to five coal companies seeking to oust union miners occupying company-owned houses in the Eastern Ohio coal district.

The orders were granted the Warner Colliers Company, for its Wolf Run and Crabapple No. 1 mines; the Boomer Coal and Coke Company, for its Rose Valley mine; the Wheeling and Lake Erie Coal Mining Company, for its Wheeling and Lake Erie No. 1; the Y. & O. Coal Company, for its Dorothy mine, and the U. S. Coal Company for its Crow Hollow No. 2 mine.

Judge Hough denied the United States Company's request for eviction orders for its Crow Hollow No. 1 mine, which is not operating.

285 FAMILIES AFFECTED

Only 285 families were affected by today's orders, which are effective May 1. At a session in chambers of opposing counsel Judge Hough announced he would consider next Saturday the matter of extending for another month the eviction orders now pending against 296 families in the district. These orders were issued January 13, but were postponed to April 1.

FIND MURDERED YOUTH IN WELL

ORLANDO, W. Va., March 24.—(AP.)—From the dark waters of a well near the deserted house where Hance Bennett, farmer, and his family once lived, deputy sheriffs today recovered the body of Harry Teter, 20, son of Daniel Teter, of near Orlando. The head had been crushed, apparently by a piece of iron.

Bloodstains on the floor of a room in the deserted house told the story of where young Teter met death. A trail of blood from the room to the well led to the finding of the body.

Sheriff A. M. Berry, of Braxton county, has arrested Owen E. Van Kirk, 20, in connection with the case. He is searching for Ophie McCoy, another suspect.

Authorities believe a quarrel over a woman—a divorcee who lives near here—caused the slaying.

Jailed for Holding Girl as Prisoner

UNIONTOWN, Pa., March 24.—Detectives who arrested Theodore Andy today accused him of keeping Katherine Opolosky, 17, prisoner, in his home for one week. Katherine said she was locked in the house after answering Andy's advertisement for a housekeeper.

Dam Disaster Probe Finds No Evidence of Bombing

Slippery Rock Girls Battle Incendiary Fire at School

LEADER—Miss Mildred Bruckheimer, head of the Health Education department at the college, directed the work of the girls' "Bucket Brigade" which kept a hand-to-hand flow of water pouring on the flames. The school fire apparatus failed to function because of the intense cold.

No Bombing Evidence Found in Disaster Quiz

LOS ANGELES, March 24.—(AP.)—If a charge of dynamite shattered the St. Francis dam and started its waters on their race of death and destruction to the sea, the blast left no evidence of itself behind so far as sheriff's officers have been able to determine.

This was the declaration today of Deputy Sheriff Harry Wright, head of the criminal investigation department of the sheriff's office.

"Nothing has been presented to this office in the way of testimony or evidence that supports a theory of dynamiting as a probable cause of the dam breaking," said Wright, "although investigators have been working throughout the entire section near the dam site since the collapse, seeking every word, fact or exhibit that will aid in arriving at the true cause of the disaster."

The coroner's jury of nine men, all of them connected with construction work as engineers, contractors or insurance appraisers, yesterday made an examination of the dam site.

With prospector's hammers they knocked off with ease pieces of the rock sidewall of the canyon against which the ill-fated dam had been placed. The terrific rush of water appeared to have sheared the rock off clean, leaving no trace of the dam's concrete abutments.

Observers said the strength of the concrete in the structure was shown by the fact that rocks in the mixture were broken cleanly, indicating the strong grip of the cement.

PNEUMONIA MONTH

Elderly People Must Be Especially Careful in March.

The physicians' statement, in thousands of cases, reads as follows: The immediate cause of death was a cold."

Millions of elderly men and women are always in danger from colds. Colds are deadly because they weaken the body cells and lower the physical resistance and as a result pneumonia becomes a menace.

Elderly people should have the proper remedy on hand to effectively kill off colds quickly. Thousands use the famous Bulgarian Herb (Blood) Tea, composed of rare medicinal roots, barks, herbs, plants and flowers, the rich juices of which, when steaming hot, stimulate the circulation, heat up the chilled blood stream and purge dangerous germs out of the system.

To break up colds quickly and avoid "flu" or pneumonia, take a cupful hot at bedtime. It builds power and resistance in your blood to fortify you through the cruel winter months.

Just ask your druggist.

Fall to Tell Story Thursday

COURT GRANTS ORDER TO TAKE DEPOSITIONS

Essential That Witness Be Examined Orally, Sinclair Motion for Quiz Says.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—(AP.)—Albert B. Fall, former Secretary of the Interior, will tell his story of the Teapot Dome lease on Thursday, March 29, at his home in El Paso, Tex.

Justice Jennings Bailey, of the District Supreme Court, today granted a motion of Harry F. Sinclair for the taking of a deposition from Fall, who is too ill to attend the trial here of Sinclair on April 4.

WRIGHT TO QUIZZ FALL

Daniel Thew Wright, who was recently retained as associate counsel by Sinclair, will conduct the examination of Fall. Representatives of the government's special counsel will be present.

A motion for permission to take the deposition submitted to Justice Bailey asked that the court issue a commission to M. B. Bull, a notary public, whose address is Courthouse Building, Forty-first District Court of Texas, El Paso, Tex., to take the oral deposition of Fall.

"The defendant, Harry F. Sinclair, further shows to the court that in order properly to take the deposition of said witness, it is essential that the witness be examined orally," the petition said as will appear by the affidavit of Reginald W. Ragland, heretofore filed in this cause, March 23, 1928.

The testimony which is expected to be adduced by the deposition of said witness, Albert B. Fall, is of such a character that it cannot properly be developed by written interrogatories.

ASKS DEPOSITION

"Defendant moves the court to pass an order that the deposition of said witness, Albert B. Fall, may be taken upon three days' notice given to the attorneys for the United States of the time and place of taking said deposition."

Ragland, one of Sinclair's counsel, recently visited Fall in El Paso. In his affidavit, filed when Sinclair asked a continuance of two months before going on trial, he said that Fall could testify he assented reluctantly at the insistence of the President to the executive order which permitted the Teapot Dome lease to be given Sinclair. He also asserted that the former Interior Secretary would say that he drove a good bargain for the government, did not favor Sinclair and that the bonds he received were for one-third interest in his ranch property, which was worth more. The bonds, he said Fall would say, were in no wise offered or received as a bribe.

Greene Credit Unit To Elect Officers

Manager A. B. Buckeridge, of the merchant-owned Pittsburgh Credit Bureau, and secretary of the Retail Credit Men's Association, has helped to organize the Greene County Credit Exchange, with headquarters at Waynesburg. Officers will be elected this week, and the new body will co-operate with both Pittsburgh organizations. Mr. Buckeridge also reports that Greensburg has just organized a wide-awake credit exchange bureau.

It has been decided by the local credit bodies to conduct a membership campaign during the organization's advertising campaign, to be started next week. Manager Buckeridge said that, while the Pittsburgh Credit Bureau and the Retail Credit Men's Association are endeavoring to educate the public on how to maintain good credit, efforts will be made to increase the membership by advertising and showing the merchants the advantages of these organizations.

LAWRENCE HAS CLEAR TRACK

The battle for the county chairmanship of the Democratic Party ended suddenly today when John M. Henry withdrew his opposition to Chairman David L. Lawrence, who is seeking re-election. At the office of the county commissioners it was said that Henry withdrew following the announcement that his nominating papers would be contested on the grounds that they had only 72 signatures instead of the 100 required.

With Easter in the offing, provident women will be quick to realize that this is the awaited opportunity to purchase a distinctive new coat at a price not at all proportionate to their worth. The styling of far more expensive coats is reproduced in these garments. One may choose the straight coats with slenderizing lines and flattering furs; the cape effects with pointed backs or over-the-shoulder only; scarfs of satin, self material or of fur; spring fur on collars of unique line and cut; and other refreshingly new details apparent at the cuffs. The newer colors—tans, blues, grays and black are represented.

Bare 'Murder Ring'

GANG KILLS ANY VICTIM FOR PRICE

"Bumping Off" Rates of Chicago Band Runs from $1,000 to $50,000, Claim.

CHICAGO, March 24.—A giant ring of hired murderers—an American Mafia—men who kill ruthlessly for money, who will journey to any city to perform revolting deeds of violence, has been uncovered in Chicago, it was claimed tonight by two police lieutenants who investigated the death of "Diamond Joe" Esposito, latest Chicago gangster victim.

The gang of murderers equipped with shotguns, machine guns, bombs and other implements of death and destruction, travels from city to city performing its ghastly work for a price, according to the lieutenants.

The bloodshed, the countless murders and bombings in Chicago were the direct work of this organization, police believe.

To kill an ordinary man the price is said to be $1,000. High city officials, leaders of gangs and others in that status call for $5,000 and on some perhaps as high as $50,000, their investigators have revealed.

It cost $10,000 to "bump off" Esposito, one lieutenant declared. The headquarters of this gang, according to the belief of the two lieutenants, is in New York, and is a revival of the old "Five Points" gang there.

Fresh clues to the slaying of "Diamond Joe" Esposito, West Side Italian politician, were sought tonight after authorities were compelled to release the three men they arrested in connection with the sensational slaying.

The three, Tony, Carlo and Louis Borsellino, were released under bonds of $1,000, after being booked on charges of having explosives in their possession.

Their alibis were found to be well founded. The three had insisted that the automobile from which five probably imported gunmen fired 58 shotgun spugs and revolver bullets into the body of the portly leader of the Italian colony was not theirs.

The Borsellinos, however, will be made to explain the presence of the explosives, in their grocery store, as well as two sawed-off shotguns and ammunition in their living quarters above, the police stated.

"Diamond Joe," known to thousands of his countrymen as an "Italian Robin Hood," distributed food and clothing to the needy in his district and was generally well liked. A "million dollar" funeral is planned for Esposito Monday.

BANKER PAYS BANK'S DEBTS

NAYLOR, Ga., March 24.—(AP.)—With his private funds J. R. Carter, president, today began paying in full all depositors in the defunct Farmers Bank of Naylor because he said he felt a "personal moral responsibility" to his former patrons.

Although he was not legally liable because of the failure, the president several days ago also redeemed all outstanding shares of capital stock of the institution so that the shareholders would suffer no loss.

His golden rule venture was said to have cost him approximately $40,000, four-fifths of which goes to the depositors.

The bank, which listed capital stock and surplus at $25,000, was closed Monday by the State Banking Department.

Pgh. Symphony Gives 2nd Concert Tonight

Margaret Matzenauer, guest artist of the Pittsburgh Symphony Society, arrived in Pittsburgh late Saturday night, enthusiastic at the success of Pittsburgh's own symphony orchestra.

The society presents its second program of the season tonight in Syria Mosque. Elias Breeskin will conduct the orchestra for the first time, although he has been concert master.

Mme. Matzenauer, leading contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will sing "My Heart, At Thy Sweet Voice," the number for which she is internationally famous. The orchestra will play Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, prelude to "Die Meistersinger" and the "1812 Overture" by Tschaikowsky.

City Trucks Used in Private Work

LANG TO FIRE EMPLOYES WHO VIOLATE RULE

Public Works Head Cites Two Cases; Will Accept No Excuses for Disobedience.

No excuse or defense will prevent the discharge of any employe of the Department of Public Works who uses city property for private work, according to an order sent all bureau heads yesterday by Director Edward G. Lang.

Simultaneously with the order, Lang sent a report to Council on charges that, in two cases, trucks belonging to the city were used to haul slag on private property.

RULES VIOLATED

In his report to Council, Lang declares that it is evident that the rules of the department against such work have been violated, added that in one case the city seems to have benefited by getting a slag freight bill paid in return for the private work and concluded that in spite of such benefit "it is against public policy and the explicit orders of this department to countenance or permit any such action."

The case that caused Council to demand an investigation occurred on February 15, when city trucks hauled three loads of slag to the premises of Fred C. Aston, Crafton, and C. A. Phillips, 1304 Steuben street. It developed that Aston had arranged to pay $30 freight for a total of 19 loads, 16 going to the city, in return for the services.

With his own report to Council, Lang submitted a report from Chief Engineer Charles M. Reppert. Reppert said the facts were admitted by Pater Hiland, district supervisor, who stated that the request to make the arrangement was made to him by E. Boyd Birch, an employe of the Department of Supplies and Republican chairman of the Twenty-eighth Ward.

"This particular point should be looked into," said Reppert.

PLOW CLEARS ROAD TO TOWN SNOWBOUND

New Food Shortage Relieved; Isolated by Heavy Precipitation Almost Month.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Mich., March 24.—(AP.)—The 600 residents of Detour, snowbound since January 29, rejoiced today over the reopening of a highway into the village by a State snow plow.

First food supplies to reach the community by road since it became isolated arrived late yesterday from Sault Ste. Marie, relieving a new shortage that threatened because of failure of any relief expeditions to reach the village in nearly a week.

Near exhaustion after three days and nights of strenuous effort, a crew of 12 men headed by Henning Anderson, State highway engineer, of Mackinaw City, and John Winter, a highway foreman, plowed into the village yesterday and were welcomed by cheers from the inhabitants.

Since its isolation the villagee had been reached only with meager provisions taken by an Army airplane, which became disabled after two trips a week ago; by a dog team; a snow motor expedition sent out by a Sault Ste. Marie newspaper, and a group of farmers from Drummond Island.

Senator Reed Tired, Slips Away for Rest

NEW YORK, March 24.—(INS.)—Trying to slip away for a quiet vacation, his first in two years, United States Senator David A. Reed (Rep.), of Pittsburgh, was found today by newspapermen aboard the S. S. Bermuda just 30 minutes before that ship weighed anchor for Bermuda.

"I am trying to get away for a short rest," the Senator explained, after expressing his surprise at "being found out."

Senator Reed refused to comment on politics in any form.

He will be away for only five days, and was accompanied by his daughter, Mrs. Charles Denby, and William Castle, assistant secretary of state.

Lorain Student Is Overcome by Gas

LANSING, Mich., March 24.—(INS.)—A leaky gas range is blamed today for the death of Morris Montgomery, insurance agenet. Mrs. Montgomery and Jerden Raymond, 24-year-old Michigan State College student, were overcome by the fumes, but are recovering. Raymond is from Lorain, Ohio.

Montgomery was a son of the late Robert Montgomery, former Supreme Court Justice of Michigan and judge of the Customs Appeal Court, at Washington. He was formerly secretary of a national brick manufacturers association with headquarters in Chicago.

36 MEXICAN REBELS SLAIN

MEXICO CITY, March 24.—(AP.)—Dispatches printed by newspapers today said government forces had executed 36 insurgents, who, refusing to surrender, made a sortie from a cave.

Dispatches from Zamora, State of Michoacan, said the band, described as the most important in the region, took refuge in the cave from federal troops. Soldiers, commanded by Lieut. Col. Aguayo, surrounded the hiding place.

The insurgents met a request to surrender with defiance and started to fight it out. For several days, without food or water, they held the cave. Before their ammunition was exhausted they made a last desperate attempt to cut their way out. The survivors were lined up and shot. The government victory was stated to leave only two bands of insurgents in the neighborhood.

Dispatches from Guadalajara, State of Jalisco, said Miguel Gomez Loza, styled by some the insurgent "governor of Jalisco," had been slain in a battle with federal troops at Ellindero.

Freedom Denied Pickets as Braun Declares Truce

64 STRIKERS LANGUISH IN PRISON CELLS

Half-Holiday Bars Bail Arrangements—Action Monday Promised by Fagan.

Sheriff Robert H. Braun has declared a truce in the mine picket war, but it means little or nothing to the 64 strikers who have been in the county jail for two days awaiting trial on charges of unlawful assembly.

Thomas Fagan, 67, father of P. T. Fagan, president of District No. 5, United Mine Workers of America, was the only one to whom bail was provided Saturday, the others preferring iron bars and stone walls to restriction of their picketing activities. The elder Fagan was the oldest picket arrested. A son, John, is still in jail.

If the jailed pickets had hope of freedom when Sheriff Braun announced his truce Saturday morning, they lost them at the closing of the county offices at noon. Bail was set at $500 by Justice of the Peace A. W. McMillen of Carnegie.

WEATHER "TOO NICE"

"The weather is too nice to put people in jail," said the sheriff Saturday, instead of arresting more pickets. "I can't say what course we shall pursue until after I have had a talk with United Mine Workers' representatives. Nobody has been in to see me about the cases, so I suppose the union people want to wait until Monday morning."

Attorney W. H. Coleman, counsel for P. T. Fagan and the United Mine Workers, said he had not taken up the picket cases and could recommend no action to the mine union officials until Monday.

Fagan also promised action Monday, but awaited Attorney Coleman's counsel.

Only seven cells remained vacant in the county jail, making confinement of more pickets a problem.

NO MORE ARRESTS

This fact, with the sheriff's truce, indicate no more arrests will be made pending some decision between the sheriff and union officials. The strikers do not picket on Sunday, anyhow.

Whether the union will be required to post $500 bail for each of the 64 pickets remains to be seen. An agreement between District Attorney Samuel H. Gardner and Sheriff Braun and the union officials might result in the release of the miners on their own recognizance, it is pointed out, and then, too, bail might be lowered.

Pickets "In" Until Monday; Cell "Not So Bad"

None of the 65 union pickets arrested at Treveskyn during the past two days will be out of jail before Monday. This was revealed this afternoon with the closing of the county offices, making it impossible to arrange bail for any who decide they have had enough of cell life.

"It apparently makes no difference with most of the boys," declared Warden John McNeil; "they seem to be enjoying themselves as guests of the county."

Hospital Association To Convene Tuesday

An exhibition of hospital supplies and equipment will be held this week at the Schenley Hotel in connection with the seventh annual conference of the Hospital Association of Pennsylvania, which opens Tuesday at the hotel. Tuesday will be taken up with registration in the morning and a business session in the afternoon, when Dr. Henry K. Mohler, medical director of the Jefferson Hospital, Philadelphia, will speak. Two business sessions will be held Wednesday and Wednesday night a dinner will be held. The conference closes Thursday.

NAB POLICEMAN MANSION THIEF

Accused of stealing furnishings from the old Henry W. Oliver mansion, Ridge and Galveston avenues, while on guard duty there, Joseph K. Hemphill, 28, city patrolman, was arrested Saturday. His wife, Hazel Hemphill, 38, of 814 James street, whom Hemphill is said to have deserted several weeks ago, furnished the police the information on which her husband was arrested and the goods recovered.

Last Wednesday Mrs. Hemphill collapsed at Federal and Sandusky streets and was taken by police to Allegheny General Hospital. Saturday she was discharged and went to the police station. She said $1,000 worth of the furnishings were in her home. Police recovered several pieces of monogrammed china, three pieces of furniture and two rugs.

Hemphill, arrested at 913 Union avenue, is said to have admitted the theft. The goods were stolen, it is said, last April, while three patrolmen were doing eight-hour shifts guarding the house.

LINCOLN MOTOR CARS

The Lincoln pledge—to build the finest car it is possible to produce—is a progressive ideal. It means that while Lincoln quality will continue to be the standard of comparison in fine motor car values, nevertheless, Lincoln builders, themselves, know no standard short of this goal—the most nearly perfect motor car in performance, in appearance and in long life.

Lincoln motor cars offer a wide range of body types. Equipment includes the six brake system, hydraulic shock absorbers, bumpers, rear view mirror, windshield wiper, and one or two spare balloon tires, according to type. Special equipment included with certain bodies.

Kidnaper's Notes Stir Town

FOUR CHILDREN THREATENED IN AS MANY DAYS

Teacher Calls Police When Message Asks Girl Be Dismissed.

COLUMBIA, Mo., March 24.—(I. N. S.)—The question of sorting hoax from reality was the problem which faced Columbia police today when they took up solution of Columbia's daily kidnaping puzzle which has brought four separate mysterious in as many days.

Involved in the maze of tangled evidence is a note demanding $1,000 under threat of kidnaping little Helen Carl from her classes at Grant school, a mysterious conversation between a dark-complexioned man and Don Cassidy which may have been an effort to lure him away from home, and a note tossed to Evelyn Toalson yesterday afternoon requesting her teacher to release her from school Monday afternoon.

Of the four cases, only that involving the 9-year-old Toalson child appeared likely to be disclosed as a hoax, but her father, Rucker Toalson, a grocer, considers the affair serious enough to order the posting of a $100 reward for arrest of the man who called her to the curb as she was returning home from school yesterday and threw the note to her. Scrawled in barely legible handwriting on a scrap of paper, the message to the child's teacher was signed with what purported to be her father's signature.

She was able to give an accurate description of the man who tossed the note to her, declaring that he wore glasses and was light complexioned. The automobile which he was driving was a dilapidated black machine with a broken rear glass, and bore no rear license tag, the child told police. She took the note immediately to her teacher, and the teacher notified the police.

TO TEST RULING ON DRUNKARD

Judge Harry H. Rowand's decision that a man who drinks booze, gets drunk, is burned and permanently disabled, has no right to recover damages, is to be contested.

This was made known Saturday when counsel for Joseph Jakuborsky made a motion before Judge A. Evans to reopen the non-suit award granted by Judge Rowand. The point at issue will be argued later before the court.

Jakuborsky, a miner, of Library, went into Annie Anisky's place January 15, 1926, bought $8 worth of moonshine, fell asleep, rolled against a stove, his clothing caught fire and he was permanently disabled. He brought suit against the Anisky woman for $25,000 damages.

Judge Rowand contended that Jakubersky, having violated the law, he had no standing in the recovery of damages and declared the Supreme Court had so ruled. The court also remarked that "as long as we have people who will drink rotten stuff, we will have law violations." He bemoaned the fact there is no law to punish those who purchase moonshine.

Rheumatism Recipe

Ex-Sergt. Paul Case, room 119, Quincy Building, Brockton, Mass., states that while serving with the American Army in France he was given a prescription for rheumatism and neuritis that has produced most gratifying results in thousands of cases. He says the prescription cost him nothing, so he asks nothing for it, but will send it free to anyone who writes him.—Advertisement.

JAWORSKI KIN ASKS RETRIAL

But one case of prominence is listed for argument in Criminal Court this week, that being the motion for a new trial of Sam Pallas, alias Sam Jaworski, who, on March 6, was found guilty on six counts of felonious assault, pointing firearms, carrying concealed weapons and aiding a prisoner to escape. Jaworski is a brother of Paul Jaworski, who, with John Vassbinder, both under sentence of death for murder, shot their way out of the county jail August 18 last. Pallas, or Jaworski, was tried for his part in the escape of his brother and Vassbinder.

The reasons for a new trial, as presented by W. J. Daniels, who defended Jaworski, set forth that the court erred in refusing to grant a postponement, and in admitting in evidence, a photographic copy of a letter alleged to have been written by Jaworski to a man in Uruguay, in which Pallas is alleged to have stated that he was going to the jail with four guns and would either get Paul out or be found in the cemetery. Judge Ambrose B. Reid presided at the trial, which was prosecuted by First Assistant District Attorney Andrew J. Park.

Straws Weave Their Way into Spring Fashion

Women are showing undeniable preference for straws this Spring. And well they may. It's been several seasons since we've had such crisp freshness, such frank individuality. Here you'll find a galaxy of colors in debutante styles, in flattering types for the matron—but youth and smartness everywhere. $10 to $75.

(Kaufmann's—Fourth Floor)

SCARFS . . . hand-painted by the genius of Finta . . . lend their soft colors to the Spring ensemble. Enough of modernism to accentuate their modishness . . . exotic in theme . . . but delicately shaded in soft pastel tones, with a blending of color with color that portrays the magic touch of a world-famous artist. Painted on heavy lustrous crepe de chine, triangles are 7.50 . . . squares are 8.50 . . . to be jauntily tied on Miss Fashionable's shoulder on Easter.

OPEN CLEAN-UP CAMPAIGN ON PALM SUNDAY

Last-Minute Details Completed — Poster Contest Feature of Drive.

Anticipating the most successful "clean up-paint up-plant up" campaign ever conducted in Pittsburgh and Allegheny county, members of the various committees in charge of the drive are completing last-minute details. The campaign will be carried out from April 1 to April 15 with the Chamber of Commerce, service and civic clubs, public, private and parochial schools and leading industrial plants co-operating.

One of the features of the campaign is the poster contest conducted in the high schools of the city and county. One hundred of these will be on display beginning tomorrow in the Chamber of Commerce rooms in connection with the graphic arts exhibit. The exhibition will close Wednesday, being open from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m., excepting Tuesday, when it will be closed at 5 p. m.

One of the features of the 1928 campaign will be the daily radio talks during the entire period over stations WCAE, WJAS and KQV.

OPENS ON SUNDAY

The opening gun will be fired on Palm Sunday by the members of the clergy, many of whom will preach on the subject of clean living. During the two weeks the school children of the grade schools will report to a central committee and each grade school in turn will report to the high school of the district. A report will be made by the latter and upon these reports will be based the awards which are offered by the chamber.

The city and county authorities will lend the aid of the members of the health department, the fire department and the police department. In downtown Pittsburgh there will be inspections to do away with fire hazards, all machinery will be gone over and all buildings will be cleaned of litter that has accumulated.

Here and there throughout the city and county barren spots will give way to scenes of beauty, planting will be given a decided impetus by the children and the city will do its share by planting trees.

It is planned to have a number of parades, as in the 1927 campaign, in order to arouse the interest throughout the various neighborhoods and various other schemes will be carried out in order to obtain wider publicity.

The central thought in the clean-up period is to develop civic consciousness on the part of all, more particularly children, to the end that their city and county might be a better place in which to live. Pride in the home and its surroundings also is aroused by the drive.

J. Rogers Flannery is general chairman of the Chamber of Commerce committee which is co-operating with the various authorities. The executive committee is composed of Mr. Flannery, B. J. Cassady, Charles Donley, F. J. Kress and Hubbe Weimer.

The advisory committee is composed of

CITES BENEFIT OF BOYS' CLUB

A liberal response to the $200,000 campaign of the Boys' Club of Pittsburgh will not only allow the officials to build a new home but will pave the way for a much larger membership, C. D. Armstrong, honorary president and chairman of the campaign, pointed out Saturday.

Mr. Armstrong said records show that the club, whose purpose is to provide under-privileged boys with the right start, has made a concrete impression in its five years' existence. He quoted Juvenile Court officials as authority for the statement that petty crimes in certain sections of the city decrease as the club's activities increase.

Mr. Armstrong has with him on his campaign committee Alfred P. Brill, president of the club; David I. McCahill, Leo G. Griffith, Edwin D. Frohman, Edwin M. Hill, Ralph W. Cadman, J. S. McCormick and E. Wayne Stoker.

Coolidge Stands By $225,000,000 Tax Reduction Limit

HOLDS RELIEF ONLY POSSIBLE WITHIN FIGURE

Preliminary Income Returns Convince Slash Can Be Made.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—(AP.)—Tax reduction, in the opinion of President Coolidge, is possible at this session of Congress only if his original proposed cut of $225,000,000 is adhered to and provided the Senate and House do not go too far in making appropriations.

His attitude is based on the existing status of the treasury where the first quarter tax returns on 1927 incomes due March 15 still are being tabulated.

While preliminary estimates of the returns have convinced the President that a tax cut as first urged by the administration will be possible, he continues to be strongly opposed to the reduction of $289,000,000 as proposed in the bill passed by the House and now awaiting action by the Senate Finance Committee. Such a cut, he believes, could not be made without jeopardizing the treasury.

RETURNS UP

While it will be several days before the actual total of the quarterly income receipts are known, the returns so far tabulated are ahead of those counted to the same date last year. On March 20 the payments had reached $365,064,463, as against $358,504,665 on the same date a year ago.

Secretary Mellon holds, however, that treasury estimates as to the surplus this fiscal year will need no revision since some increased congressional appropriations are likely to offset any extra returns from the income tax.

The Senate Finance Committee faces a stiff task April 3 when it takes up the House tax bill, which raises the administration reduction proposal by nearly $65,000,000. Senate Republicans have claimed the $289,000,000 reduction is entirely too high, while the Democrats have termed it not high enough and probably will move for further cuts to add to those put in the House bill by a coalition of Democrats and Republicans over the protest of the administration.

Navy Sends Out Call for More Radio Experts

International News Service.

WASHINGTON, March 24.

THE United States is said to be suffering a shortage of radio operators. The rapid expansion of commercial and military wireless communication systems during the last two years has overtaxed the nation's training facilities. The Navy alone now has 334 vacancies in its normal peace-time force.

"With complements reduced to the minimum it is not possible to keep such complements filled," said Capt. T. T. Craven, director of naval communications, today in a plea to all fleet officers for intensive schooling of new operators.

The Navy now has 2,750 radiomen in service.

So widespread and reliable has the naval wireless system become that general orders were issued today for the cancellation of all naval code addresses registered with commercial cable companies.

Wins $20,000 Balm

SUES—Miss Gertrude McGushion (right) was awarded $20,000 heart balm by a Cleveland jury after only 20 minutes' deliberation. Duci de Kerekjarto, violinist, was defendant. At the left is also shown Miss Dorothy, her sister, who was Miss Gertrude's only witness.

RAISE FUND TO DEFEND WOMAN

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 24—(A. P.)—Friends of Mrs. Mabel Monteabaro and Miss Cecil Tubbs, held in jail here for trying to kill H. F. Blake, Calera chief of police, said today that more than $500,000 has been pledged to make bonds and provide for their defense. Blake, who was shot at by Mrs. Monteabaro, was said today to have a good chance to recover unless infection sets in. The attack was made in the courtroom at Columbiana just as the jury acquitted him of murder of Louise Monteabaro. The mother and aunt are held in jail here pending the outcome of the wounds.

Zoning Board Is Restrained by Court

An alternative writ of prohibition to prevent the Zoning Board of Appeals from considering the petition of Mrs. C. DeSimone, 7113 Reynolds street, who wants to open a store there, was granted Saturday by Judge John A. Evans.

Her attorney, William H. Colvin, says it is the second time in the history of the county that such a writ has been issued. The action takes the subject at issue out of the hands of the appeal board and puts the issue before the court.

FIVE INJURED IN TRAIN CRASH

HAGERSTOWN, Md., March 24.—(INS.)—Five men were injured early today when two freight trains on the Western Maryland Railroad were wrecked at Altenwald cutoff, six miles north of Hagerstown.

The injured were Charles Stump, engineer, feet scalded; George Kanl, injured back; Edward Mann, conductor, fractured collar bone; W. R. Shadden, engineer, and Frank Henninger, fireman. The latter two were removed to their homes, the others being brought to a hospital.

An eastbound double-header freight bucked and a westbound double-header plunged into it, according to reports.

P. R. R. Asks to Buy Columbus & Xenia

WASHINGTON, Mar. 24.—(INS)—The Pennsylvania Railroad today asked the Interstate Commerce Commission for authority to acquire the Columbus & Xenia Railroad, a 52-mile line operating between those two Ohio cities. The Pennsylvania now operates the line under a lease. It would pay $125 a share for 25,334 shares of the capital stock of the road now outstanding, with a par value of $50 a share.

Committee chairmen to direct the activities of the annual picnic of more than 6,000 Squirrel Hill school children, to be held in Kennywood Park June 6, were named by Frank L. Duggan, president of the Squirrel Hill Board of Trade, sponsors of the event, yesterday.

Hasley and Mrs. Paul Hamilton, invitation; James M. Magee, prizes; Roland G. Deevers, athletics; A. B. McSwiggan, advertising; P. J. Kumpf and Ben R. Marshall, city traffic inspector, safety, and W. IMPROVEMENTS IN NEW MOTOR High power at slow motor speed, economy of complete combustion and greater accessibility are a few of the achievements in the new Powell Lever motor, says a statement by the A. L. Powell Power Company, of Oak Park, Ill.

In the new motor the manufacturer employs a lever interposed between the crankshaft and piston to deliver twice the piston pressure to the crankshaft. Through the lever arrangement tests have shown the motor capable of more power per pound, more power a gallon and more power each engine revolution, officers of the company say.

Engineers of the company, in their experiments with the new motor, devised a new-type crankshaft, milled from a solid cylinder of high test steel. This new crankshaft and the lever action have been so delicately balanced that every possibility of vibration is practically eliminated, they say.

Cylinder heads have been designed to effect complete turbulence of the fuel mixture and complete consumption of the vaporized gases, resulting, Powell engineers say, in the elimination of carbon deposits.

Each piston and rod assembly are removable through the sides of the motor. In tests it was found feasible to remove an entire piston and rod assembly and start away "minus one" in but 20 minutes.

No matter what your ailment is, it will be to your advantage to learn about I-ON-A-CO.—the appliance that attacks the very source of disease—and why it has proved so effective in all kinds of illness.

What I-ON-A-CO is and Does

I-ON-A-CO is the result of years of research to find a practical and inexpensive means of applying electromagnetic energy to the human body. Its chief results, observed in hundreds of cases are: First, increased oxidation, with consequent elimination of waste matter, which causes ill health; second, induced energy in the nervous system and other cell structure; third, dilation of the small blood vessels, with consequent improvement in circulation; fourth, more rapid formation of new tissue.

I-ON-A-CO Not Expensive

You or all the members of your family can enjoy the benefits of I-ON-A-CO in your home, yet the expense will be negligible—merely a few pennies' worth of electric current. . .

READ THIS TYPICAL LETTER

It is now about 65 days since I bought my I-ON-A-CO and we have made good use of same and the results are as follows:

Myself: Indigestion of many years' standing absolutely gone. My wife: Suffered with chronic bronchitis for 25 years, and is now feeling 90% better. There is no doubt that permanent results will be forthcoming. My daughter had a severe case of Rheumatism. Same has been arrested, and after hundreds of sleepless nights is now able to sleep normally.

You may send anyone to my house any evening after 6 o'clock, or Saturday afternoons and Sundays, and I will be glad to tell them all I have told you, and I can even explain more. I am astonished at results.

Wishing you every success,
Very truly yours,

Fire Menaces City

3 COMPANIES BATTLE WITH BRUSH BLAZE

Downtown Protection Crippled by Transfer of Firefighters to Other Districts.

A grass fire on the outskirts of Pittsburgh became a menace to the business district of the city Saturday. After Fire Chief Richard L. Smith had issued a warning on grass fires, one broke out in Fairywood, in the old Chartiers township section, and three fire companies from the southwestern portion of the city were summoned.

That left that section unprotected and one of the downtown companies was sent to the West End as a precautionary measure.

Fire Chief Smith has asked the co-operation of the police bureau in making arrests of those responsible for brush fires, which generally are caused by carelessness.

In the Fairywood fire, it is believed, the flames started from a leaking oil line and quickly spread throughout the district.

Two fires in Fricks Woods were extinguished by city firemen and Boy Scouts. Numerous other grass fires called out firemen.

Twenty-six alarms were sounded in the 12-hour period from 5:30 a. m. till 5:30 p. m., most of them grass fires. Seven other alarms for grass fires were sounded in the North Side.

ALLEGED BOY KILLER FACES TRIAL MONDAY

Youth, 16, Believed Youngest Tried for Murder Here; Confession Claimed.

Alvin Hess, 16, of 247 Hazel way, West Homestead, will go on trial for murder Monday. He, with Robert Stephens, 14, of 214 Hazel way, West Homestead, are charged with the murder of an unknown white man about 55, who was beaten to death and robbed on the Monongahela River bank, near Brown's Bridge, September 2, last.

Hess is believed to be the youngest person ever tried for murder in the county. Stephens, who was also scheduled to go on trial for the same crime, will be tried later, his attorneys having been granted a severance. Hess since the crime has been in jail and Stephens, due to his youth, has been confined in the detention home of the Juvenile Court.

A confession alleged by the police to have been made by the two boys stated that they were seated on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad tracks, when the stranger approached and asked directions to Pittsburgh. One of the boys is alleged to have struck the man with a piece of heavy timber, which stunned him, and according to the confession:

The boys followed their victim and struck him with a large stone, felling him to the ground. They then rifled his pockets, securing three one-dollar bills, 75 cents in change and a car check. The body was dragged into some bushes, where it was found by some campers and the police notified. The man, still living, was removed to the Homestead Hospital, where he died the next day.

VICTIM UNIDENTIFIED

Efforts to have the man identified proved futile.

Assistant District Attorney George F. P. Langfitt will act for the commonwealth and Hess will be represented by Attorney A. L. Cramer.

Arthur Culberson and his brother, James Culberson, Negroes, will go on trial Monday charged with the murder of Edgar Johnson, 26, Negro, at 732 Chianti street, who died in the Pittsburgh Hospital December 10 last, from injuries due to being struck in the face with a brick at 140 Winslow street. The injuries are alleged to have been inflicted by the Culberson brothers. Assistant District Attorney Roy T. Clunk will look after the commonwealth's case and the defense will be conducted by Attorney Rebecca Davis.

W. & J. Professor Honored by France

WASHINGTON, Pa., March 24.—Dr. Louis Malecot, head of the department of romance languages at Washington and Jefferson College, had been notified that he has been awarded the decoration of Palmes Academiques by the French government as official recognition of services in French letters in this country. Last June his research done on the thesis "Les Sources de L'Algion" won the degree of doctor of philosophy from the University of Pittsburgh. Two Girls Live On Hot Water and Rice

Because of stomach trouble, Miss A. H. and sister lived on hot water and rice. But since taking Adlerika, they say they can eat anything and feel fine.

The simple mixture of buckthorn bark, glycerine, saline, etc., (known as Adlerika), has a most surprising TWO FLE actions. First, it acts on BOTH upper and lower bowel (most medicines act on lower bowel only) and removes foul matter that often poisoned the system for months. Second, Adlerika clears all GAS and sourness from stomach and bowels, bringing INSTANT relief from stomach trouble. And in addition, Adlerika removes metabolic poisons which cause neuritis, rheumatism, etc.

Dr. H. L. Shoub, New York, writes: "Adlerika, in addition to its intestinal cleansing, checks the growth of intestinal bacteria and bacilli."

Dr. J. Weaver: "In my 50 years' practice I have found nothing to excel Adlerika."

J. E. Puckett: "After using Adlerika, I feel better than for 20 years. Awful impurities were eliminated."

It will astonish you the great amounts of poisonous matter Adlerika brings out—matter you would never believe was in your system. In chronic constipation, gas bloating, sour stomach and sick headache, just ONE spoonful Adlerika brings wonderful relief. At leading druggists. Sold in Pittsburgh by May Drug Co. and other druggists.

SAVINGS VANISH WHEN SHE'S IN 'GLORY BARN'

New Kensington Striker Names Girl Roomer in Theft of $5,000.

A striking miner's wealth—$5,000—disappeared from his New Kensington home while his wife was praying in the "Glory Barn" at McKeesport, John Reynolds, 833 Third avenue, New Kensington, reported the theft to county and city detectives and named Alice Crouse, 19, of McKeesport, former roomer in the Reynolds home, as one who might know something of the theft. Police said they were searching for George J. Marlier, of McKeesport, with whom the girl is said to have been living in New Kensington.

The money, crammed in an old-fashioned pocketbook and tied with a necktie, was kept in a dish in the china closet. It was there Friday when Mrs. Reynolds went to McKeesport to hear a sermon on faith healing.

During her absence the Crouse girl is said to have visited the home and during a brief absence of Mr. Reynolds the money disappeared.

Miss Crouse is said to have given up her room in New Kensington shortly after the money disappeared. Later, police report, she was seen with a girl and two men in an automobile, and had told friends that she was going to Cleveland or Detroit.

AGE PENSION BILL BATTLE STARTS HERE

Amendment, Defeated by Mellon Organization, to Be Reintroduced in Legislature

The old-age pensions amendment, defeated at the last session of the Legislature after the full weight of the Mellon organization had been thrown against it, will be reintroduced next year.

The campaign for the passage of the amendment was begun here yesterday when John F. O'Toole, chairman of the old-age pension committee of the Pennsylvania Fraternal Order of Eagles, sent questionnaires on the subject to all candidates for office.

MEMBERS QUESTIONED

Two sets of questionnaires were sent out by O'Toole. One, addressed to all candidates for State Senate and House, asked if they favored a constitutional amendment enabling the Legislature to appropriate money for old-age pensions and if they would vote for such a bill. The other, addressed to candidates for other offices, merely asked them to express their opinion on the proposed amendment.

"The only question at issue at the present time is whether or not the citizens of Pennsylvania shall be given the opportunity to express their opinion by referendum ballot upon this proposed constitutional amendment," wrote O'Toole to the candidates, asking them to sign and return the circulars.

CAUSED BIG FIGHT

The old-age pension proposal caused the biggest fight of the 1927 session. It was introduced by Mrs. Flora M. Vare, senator from Philadelphia, and openly supported by Senator William S. Vare. It was approved by the Senate, the vote being 32 to 12. In the House the leaders of the groups headed by State Chairman W. L. Mellon and Joseph R. Grundy threw their resources into the fight. In spite of Vare's support the amendment was defeated 125 to 64.

Should it be approved by the next session, it must be again approved by the session of 1931 before it would go to the people for a vote in 1932.

Liberty Bridge Opening Tuesday to Be Gala Event for S

Banquet, Speeches At Span Exercises

The South Hills folks are going to celebrate the opening of the new Liberty Bridge with bands, flags, parade and a cheer.

On the word of H. A. Jackson, general chairman of the Liberty Bridge opening celebration, next Tuesday will be a gala day, not only for Mt. Lebanon, Dormont and other South Hills districts, but for Pittsburgh as well.

The monster parade, with bands, mounted police and floats, will wend its way into the heart of Pittsburgh and inform this metropolis that the South Hills suburbs are wildly excited about the new bridge and appreciates its completion.

START IN MT. LEBANON

The parade is to form in Mt. Lebanon in West Liberty avenue, at 12 o'clock and move at 1 o'clock.

There will be a convoy of 25 motorcycle police from the city and suburbs, augmented in Carson street by an additional group of 10. There will be bands, a color guard, county and city officials in automobiles, the general committee, also in automobiles, floats created by civic bodies and other features.

Down the Washington road and West Liberty avenue to Pioneer street the parade will go, then to the Brookline boulevard, back to West Liberty avenue and to the south entrance of the Liberty tunnels. The parade will not come to Pittsburgh through the tunnels, but will detour via Boggs avenue to Warrington and the Brownsville road, and so to Carson street and the Smithfield Street Bridge. At Sixth avenue and Smithfield street the paraders will turn up to Forbes street, proceed on to the Liberty Bridge and meet the County Commissioners and other officials in the center of the structure.

CEREMONY AT 3

Here, at 3 o'clock, Norman Brown, director of the Department of Public Works of the county, will present the bridge to the County Commissioners, who in turn will present the new bridge to the people of the county.

Tuesday night at 6:30 o'clock the celebrating banquet will be held at the William Penn Hotel, when orators and well wishers will discourse on the event.

The celebration is being sponsored by the Brookline Board of Trade, Brookline Boosters' Association, Brookside Farms Civic Association, Castle Shannon Business Men's Association, Dormont Chamber of Commerce, Eighteenth Ward Board of Trade, Mt. Lebanon Chamber of Commerce, Mt. Washington Board of Trade, Overbrook Board of Trade, West End Board of Trade and the West Liberty Board of Trade.

Besides Mr. Jackson, general chairman, those aiding in the celebration are C. C. Poling, chairman of the banquet committee; C. E. Hood, chairman parade committee; T. H. Baird, secretary, and S. W. Provost, treasurer.

New Span Boon To South Hills Says Armstrong

"NO section in Allegheny county is growing more rapidly than the South Hills. With the opening of the Liberty bridge, residents of that section will be afforded greater facilities in traveling to and from the downtown district of the city. That the South Hills section will expand more quickly is a certainty with the throwing open of the new span. The South Hills is the garden spot of the county and persons of moderate means, desirous of owning a home, will find a haven south of the Liberty tubes and Liberty bridge."

—JOSEPH G. ARMSTRONG, Chairman, Board of Allegheny County Commissioners.

New Era for South Hills Seen In New Bridge

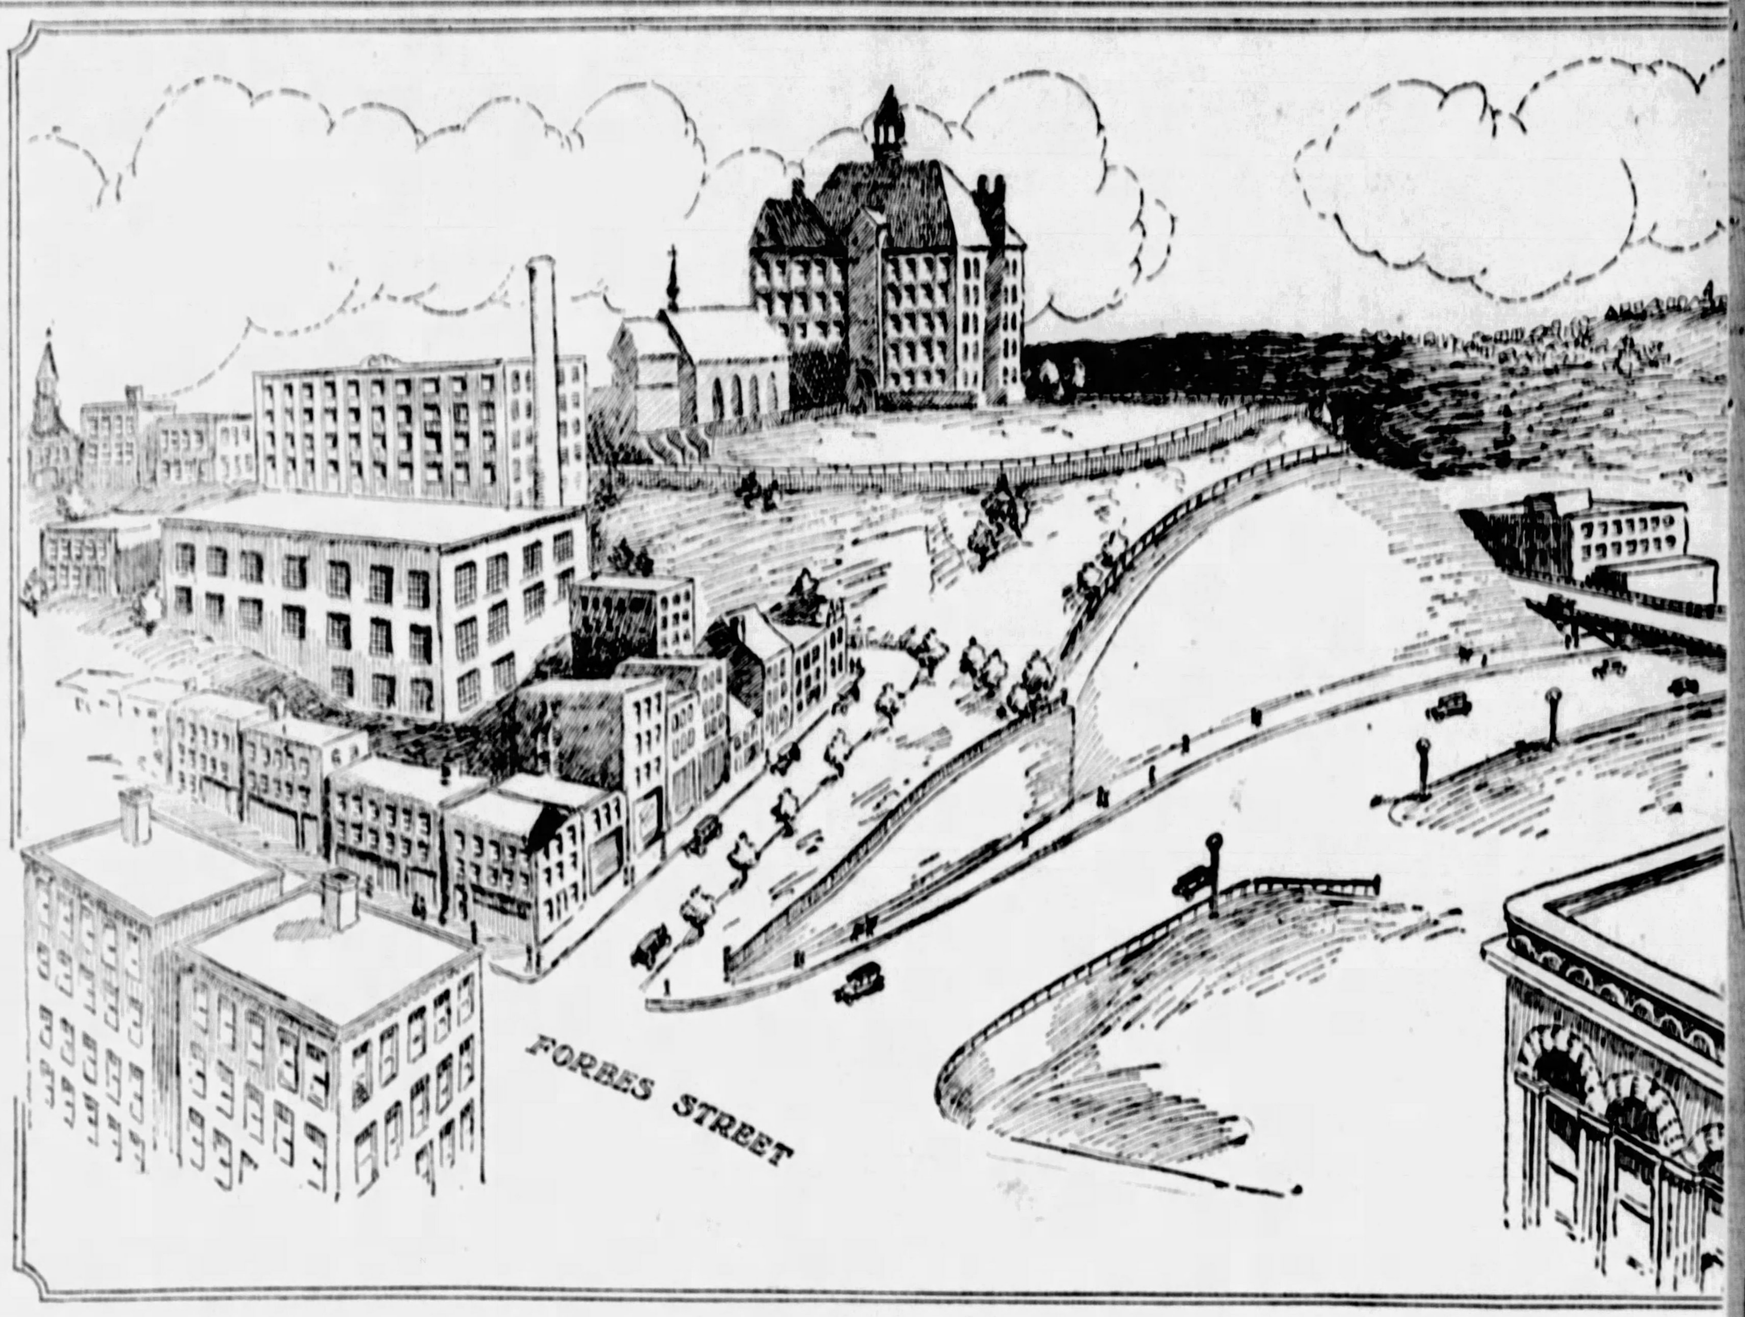
"THE opening of the Liberty Bridge marks a new era for the South Hills. Forming a direct route from downtown and the Oakland districts, the bridge will bring residents of the South Hills into closer touch with affairs of the city. The possibilities for expansion are unlimited. Within the next few years the South Hills will grow by leaps and bounds. Although every resident of the county, regardless what section he might live in, will be benefited by the new span, those of the South Hills particularly will reap the fruits of progress and prosperity."

—CHARLES J. McGOVERN, Allegheny County Commissioner.

H. O. Allison Named Safety Bureau Head

Announcement was made at the offices of the Pittsburgh Railways Company yesterday that H. O. Allison has been named manager of the newly organized department, the bureau of accident prevention. Mr. Allison will continue as commercial manager of the Beaver Valley Traction Company, but will have his offices in the main building of the company, 435 Sixth avenue.

Artist's Panorama Sketch of Liberty Bridge and Tunnels Showing Nev



BRIDGE WORK OF ART, BEAUTY

Pittsburgh, the City of Bridges, will celebrate, Tuesday, the opening of its most interesting and picturesque bridge.

The Liberty Bridge, connecting Forbes street, in the heart of the city, with the Liberty Tunnels, which pierce the mountainous barrier to the south, is a reality and a thing of beauty.

Constructed at a cost of $3,500,000, work was started on the structure in July of 1925 and the finishing touches are still being put on as this paper goes to press.

But the bridge itself, aside from its value as an artery for automobile traffic direct to the vast South Hills expanse, is an interesting piece of engineering.

Arching its 3,657 feet of solidity gracefully over the broad Monongahela River, it attains a height above the river pool level of 113 feet. Motorists and pedestrians will be thrilled by the unparalleled vista offered from the bridge. Teeming river activities, brilliant city skyline, massive cliffs and industries that are the basis of Pittsburgh's greatness will lie unfolded before the sight of the bridge travelers.

Not only is the Liberty Bridge the longest of the city's bridges, but it is the most unusual.

Its city approaches are in the form of gentle ramps, one from Forbes street, 44 feet wide, and two, on either side of this ramp, from the Boulevard of the Allies, each 19½ feet wide.

From the Forbes street approach to the ramp leading onto the bridge there was constructed a boulevard against the cliff leading to the Duquesne University. Bracing the cliff and protecting the short boulevard is a wall nearly 80 feet high and 36 inches thick, the largest wall of its kind ever built. More than 186,000 yards of excavation were removed on this slope and 10,000 cubic yards of masonry used in the wall. Special construction was required to anchor the wall into the cliff and build drainage systems to care for the seepage and moisture of the soil.

The Liberty Bridge has been built for a vast amount of vehicular traffic. The roadway on the bridge proper is 38 feet wide, enough for four lanes of traffic. Sidewalks, 8½ feet wide, border the roadway on both sides. The surface of the roadway has been finished in asphaltic concrete over a concrete base. A total of 21 different contracts were awarded in the construction of this newest of Pittsburgh's bridges.

Sharon Hotel to Add 60 Rooms

SHARON, Pa., March 24.—A 60-room addition to the Standard Hotel is planned by the owners, Alex Silverman and Sol Leff, of Pittsburgh. The present structure is four stories with 64 rooms.

Liberty Br South Hil

Panegyrics are being written tempting to envisage what the L erty Bridge will mean to the So Hills district.

But even the most pronounced, most prophetic, the most pra worthy written expression fails convey a certain enthusiasm, sti ulation and eager anticipation ma ifest in the manner and tone voice of the South Hills residen

For that portion of the Pit burgh district has enjoyed a mantic and phenomenal grow during the last few years which comparable with the mushroom velopment of many of the min and oil towns of the West. B unlike those El Dorados of spirited West, the expansion d velopment of the South Hills h permanence, definiteness and s bility.

"We have doubled our taxab valuation every four years sin 1920," enthused a Mt. Lebano resident.

"The taxable valuation of Do mont has grown from $1,000,000 i its incorporation 19 years ago t nearly $20,000,000 today," said Dormont enthusiast.

"The Liberty Bridge is the real ization of years of planning, hop ing and dreaming," said L. T Stevenson, Mt. Lebanon citizen "and will make possible th abundant future prophesied fo this district. Other improvement preceding the Liberty Bridge, suc as the widening of Liberty avenu and the opening of the Libert Tubes, were but piece-meal im provements. Their full benefi could not be realized until thi bridge was built and gave fre and direct access to the Sout Hills districts."

"There is absolutely no limit t the development possibilities o the South Hills made through th opening of the Liberty Bridge, said Prof. J. F. Moore, of th Brookline school, who will be th principal speaker at the Libert Bridge opening celebration ban quet next Tuesday.

"I predict the South Hills sec tions will double in population i the next 20 years," Prof. Moor said, "and base my conjecture o the unprecedented growth of thes communities during the last 2 years. The South Hills are des tined to become the greatest resi dential section of the city o Pittsburgh, and I expect to se the development extend clear t the Washington county line.

"The Liberty Bridge is looke upon as being an improvemen mostly for the Nineteenth Ward Dormont and Mt. Lebanon dis tricts," Prof. Moore added. "Bu in reality it will mean vast de velopment opportunities for Ov erbrook, Castle Shannon, Bald win township, Greentree, Bridge ville and all the surrounding an adjacent sections. As a residen tial district, favored by genti winds from the southwest, all o this South Hills expanse offer the finest air and atmosphere t be found about this industria space. Our schools and churche are growing apace, our popula tion is stable and of excelle stock, and if Pittsburgh is de tined to grow, we are laying th foundation here in the Sout Hills for the great residentia district of the city."

Real estate promoters who fo saw, with prophetic vision, th South Hills of today, are eq optimistic of the South Hills of morrow.

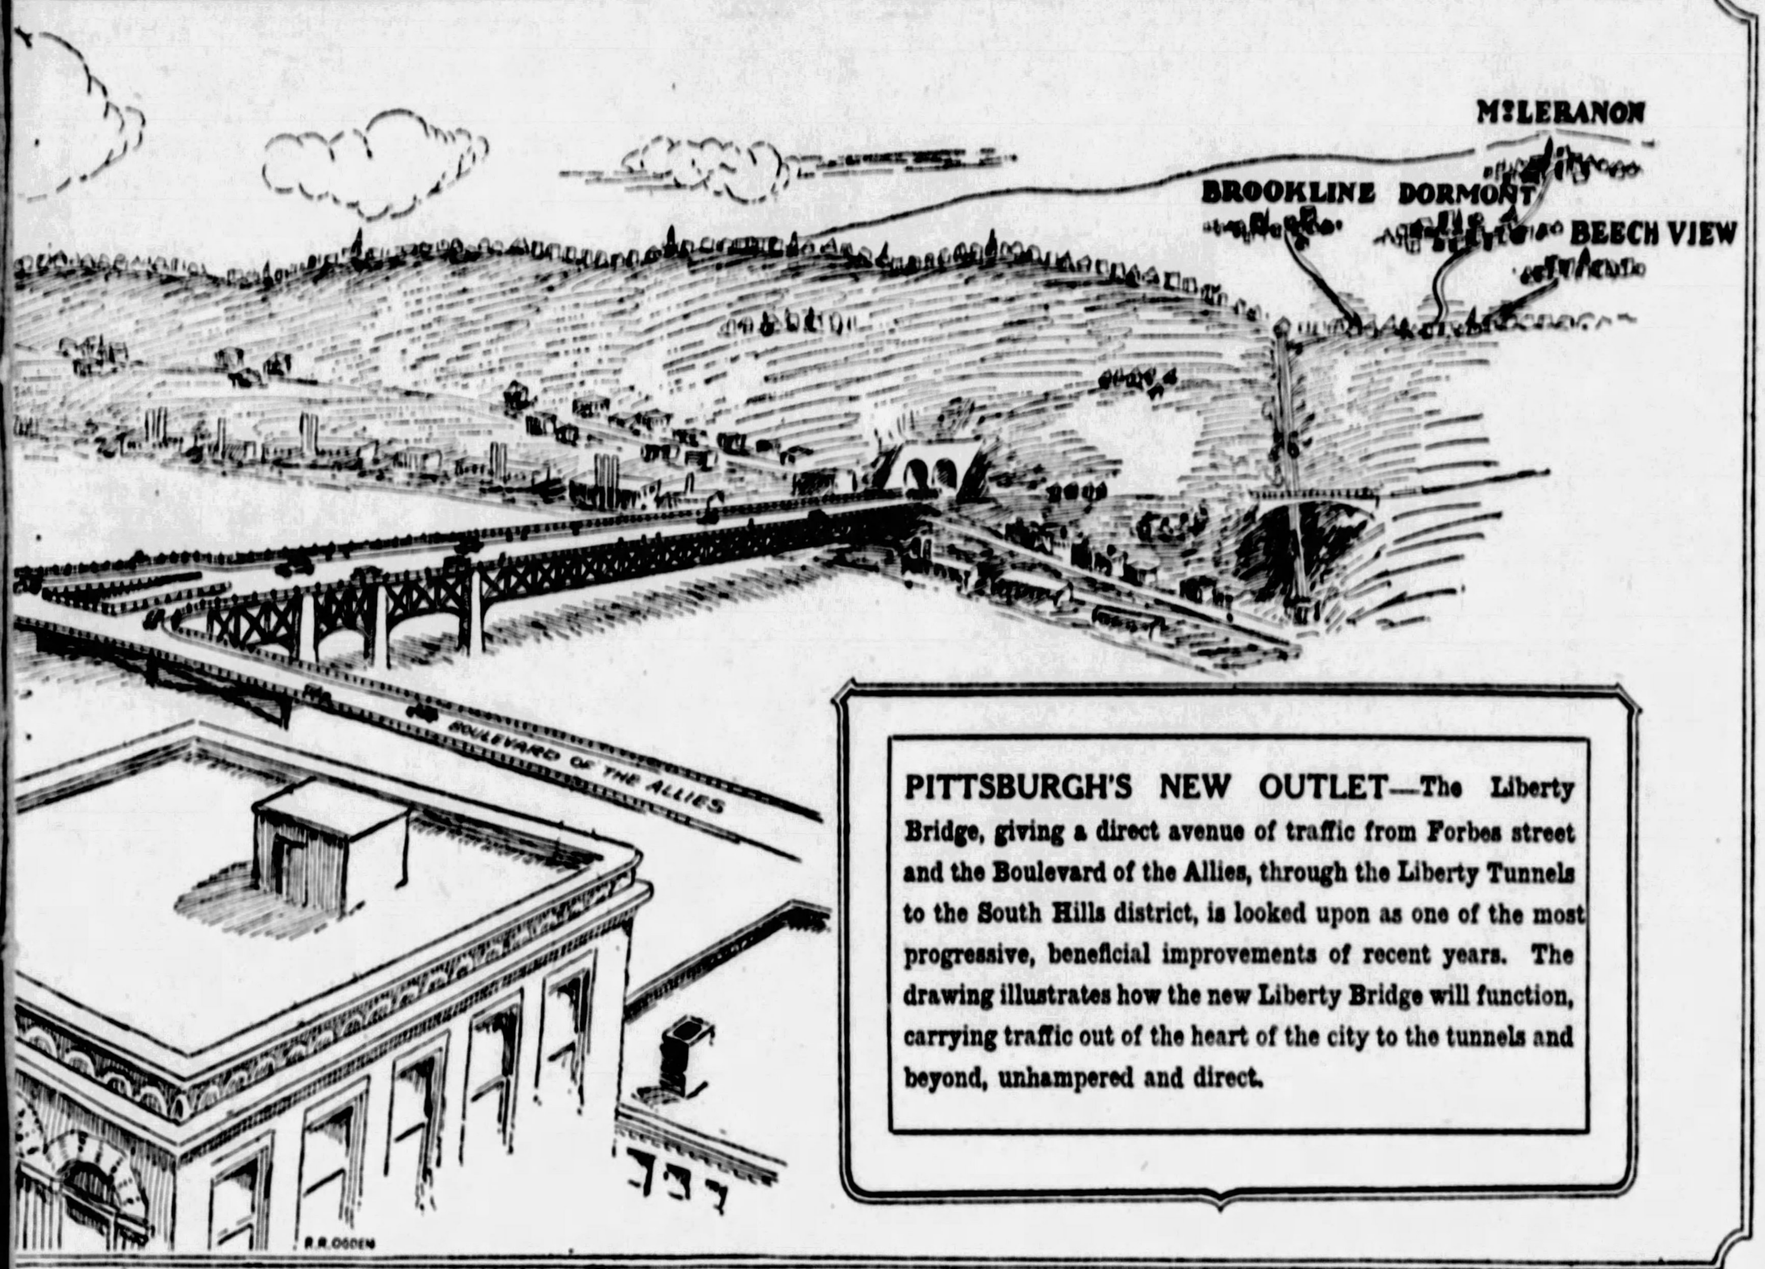
Main Traffic Artery and How It Leads Direct to South Hills Suburbs



PITTSBURGH'S NEW OUTLET—The Liberty Bridge, giving a direct avenue of traffic from Forbes street and the Boulevard of the Allies, through the Liberty Tunnels to the South Hills district, is looked upon as one of the most progressive, beneficial improvements of recent years. The drawing illustrates how the new Liberty Bridge will function, carrying traffic out of the heart of the city to the tunnels and beyond, unhampered and direct.

300,000 BENEFIT BY NEW BRIDGE, DECLARES BROWN

COMPLETION of the $4,000,000 Liberty Bridge will afford facilities, in conjunction with the Liberty Tubes, for entrance into Pittsburgh of approximately 300,000 people from the South Hills in a very short time.

I am fearful of the resultant congestion in the vicinity of Fifth avenue and Forbes street at the Courthouse, and on Ross street.

The widening of Fifth avenue, the removal of the jail, and the widening of Forbes street between the morgue and the new Armstrong tunnels will be an absolute necessity immediately, if the taxpayers are to benefit by this improvement and have free access between the triangle and the outlying districts south of the Liberty Tubes.

NORMAN F. BROWN,
Director Allegheny County Department Public Works.

dge Makes s El Dorado

tics, Allegheny County Department of Public Works, "over the old route from Forbes street to West Liberty avenue. The bridge and tunnel route measures 1.7 miles, whereas, in former years the route over Wood street, Smithfield street bridge, Carson street, Brownsville avenue, Warrington avenue and so to the south end of the tunnels was 3.7 miles."

"The bridge offers a revelation to our traffic," said L. T. Stevenson, business man of Mt. Lebanon. "This district is now but 10 minutes' drive from Pittsburgh. The tunnels did not materially cut down our running time to the city, the congestion in Carson street and on the Smithfield Street Bridge holding us back to a great measure. It also will eliminate use of the most dangerous corner in the entire district, the corner of Brownsville avenue and Carson street."

"We predict a saving of at least five minutes on traffic to the South Hills," said Ben Marshall, superintendent of the Bureau of Traffic of the city. "We also expect the traffic over the Smithfield Street Bridge will be cut down 99 per cent. Of course, no one knows what the result will be at Sixth street, but we are hopeful it will be satisfactorily taken care of and not cause difficulty. There may have to be some widening of streets and future changes made to give access to the bridge from the Forbes street entrance, but we are not worrying over that yet. The Liberty Bridge is a splendid improvement and worth more than 100 per cent at the outset."

Sees New Span Realization of So. Hills Dream

"THE opening of the Liberty Bridge undoubtedly will result in a greater expansion of the South Hills section clear to the Washington county line. It brings the residential districts of the South Hills nearer than East End to downtown Pittsburgh. It will go a long way to relieve congestion in the downtown streets by pouring the tremendous South Hills traffic outside of the Golden Triangle. The dream of the residents of the South Hills for many years is now a reality and the improvement will more than pay for itself in the next few years."

—E. V. BABCOCK,
Allegheny County Commissioner.

his arm in a gesture to encircle the vast open district to the south of Mt. Lebanon.

"It is only a matter of time," he said, "before all that district you see will be developed in a splendid, strictly residential section, and I expect to see Washington road built up all the way to the Washington county line. It is inevitable. Our high elevation, our public utilities, our schools and direct avenue of approach to the heart of Pittsburgh, through the Liberty Bridge opening, offer exceptional benefits to the home owner."

And these are not the idle panegyrics of a selected few, but the well-founded truths and prophecies of the entire people of the South Hills. To them, the opening of the Liberty Bridge offers vast possibilities and the atmosphere of general enthusiasm is as contagious as the fever of a gold rush.

"Well, there IS gold in the South Hills," opined an old residenter. "Gold in the sunlit beauty of the South Hills, gold in the steadily increasing property values, gold in the rosiate future of the district. No prospector in the Rockies was ever half so sure of values as the newcomer in the South Hills."

As to Pittsburgher and suburbanite alike, the new avenue over the river and through the mountain offers quick ingress and egress, bringing the suburban resident speedily and easily to the heart of the city and taking the city dweller as joyously to the open fields and open country to the south.

SOUTH HILLS 5 MIN. NEARER

The South Hills have been moved five minute nearer Pittsburgh through the building of the Liberty Bridge.

This is the general belief of those who have studied the traffic benefit of this new bridge, which, in connection with the Liberty Tunnels, gives a direct and unhampered access to the South Hills district.

"A saving of exactly two miles has been effected," said Joseph White, of the Bureau of Statis-

Nerve-Racked Brokers Ask for Three-Day Rest

13 HECTIC DAYS ON FLOOR PLAY OUT TRADERS

Workers Exhausted After Guiding Golden Stream; Sleep Near Offices.

NEW YORK, March 24.—(AP.)—Battered and nerve-wracked by the unprecedented markets of the last two weeks, members of the New York Stock Exchange have petitioned for a three-day holiday starting on Good Friday, April 6.

Although the last 13 days have seen a golden stream of commissions the big traders and their assistants and clerks have almost reached the limit of human endurance.

The work is so specialized that intelligent extra help is hard to get and the regular office forces have been forced to carry the burden of the extra work.

With the close of the five-hour session of the exchange, during which a trader is pushed and mauled by other eager buyers and sellers, he can not put on his hat and call it a day's work. He must patch up his torn clothes, grab something to eat and direct his corps of assistants in the work of tabulating and recording the day's transactions, which work extends far into the night.

Many of the big firms have provided sleeping quarters near their offices and nearly all those who commute—employer and employe alike—have been forced to live at hotels during the last two weeks so as not to lose the precious hours that would be wasted in traveling back and forth to their homes.

The price of seats has doubled in the last year. As early in 1927 a stock exchange seat could be had for $170,000. The latest figure paid was an advance of $5,000 over the previous record high paid last Wednesday.

The volume of trading has also broken all previous records. During the last hectic 13 days 43,964,805 shares have changed hands. Since 1792 when the exchange was formed there have been only 22 trading days in which the total sales were over the 3,000,000 mar' and exactly half those have been in the last two weeks, with the two short days of trading on Saturday seeing totals over 2,000,000.

A cautionary note has been sounded by a number of big firms, warning their customers that the market had been going too fast, that the rise had been too perpendicular and that a reaction might be expected at any time.

How to Make Flame Of Candle Into Flag

By HARDEEN.

Good things come in small packages and silk is one of the best of the good things that has ever been offered the magician to work with. He can easily palm a large American flag that when unfolded makes one believe the trick impossible.

HARDEEN

One of the most inexpensive and most successful tricks for parlor entertainment is the flag, candle and match box trick. These are all the articles needed and the illusion presents an amazing novelty.

Effect: The Magician walks to a table whereon he has placed a candle and a match box partly open. Takes from the match box one match, lights the candle. Places the box on the table, then closes his hand over the flame, putting it out by giving the impression that he has taken the flame in his hands and is seen rolling it. Then with right hand he takes from the left which is partly closed the tip of a silk flag, slowly draws it out to its full size.

Secret: The silk flag is enclosed in the open end of the match box. As he takes the match out of the box he closes the box thereby forcing the flag into the palm of his hand. Then with the other hand, he smothers the flame. The bringing of the flag into sight may be accomplished in a showmanship style by allowing it to work up between the thumbs as you work your arms up and down in a slow motion from the elbow to the finger tips.

Pardoned John Doe Stumps Lawrence Co.

NEW CASTLE, Pa., March 24.—The question that is unsolved here is who is this mysterious John Doe, granted a pardon by the Pardon Board this week at Harrisburg. The report of the Pardon Board said that he had been sent up from Lawrence county on a charge of breaking and entering. A check of the records at the Court House has so far failed to reveal the identity of this particular John Doe.

There are several persons serving time from the county under that name, but the man pardoned does not appear to have been any of those whose records have been examined. In the meantime the mystery is still unexplained and the effort to solve it goes on here.

I was sore and lame across my back in the region of my kidneys and my limbs and arms would be tired and ache. FREE-Trial Treatment for DEAFNESS

HEAD NOISES FROM CATARRH

25,000 Trial Treatments Given Away This Month ABSOLUTELY FREE!

Take advantage of this generous offer now. So sure are we of the success of the Dr. Coffee Home Treatment that you may make this test in your own home. It costs you nothing. Thousands of instances have proved the worth of this original home treatment—it has overcome impaired hearing for many people—people who had resigned themselves to a life with defective hearing.

Why not give this method a test at once? This unusual offer is going more than half way in order to demonstrate, at no expense to you, that this original treatment will help or restore your hearing. Surely such a liberal offer should not go unheeded. Mail the coupon today. The treatments will be sent postpaid.

Dr. W. O. Coffee, one of the most widely known physicians in the Central West for many years, originated a treatment which completely restored his own hearing and stopped the most severe head noises after many treatments had failed. You can try this same treatment FREE!

The purpose of this announcement is to give away, absolutely free, during the next 30 days, 25,000 trial treatments. This liberal offer is made to everyone suffering with deafness, dullness of hearing or head noises from ear tubal catarrh or merely with nasal catarrh; especially those with whom one ear is affected and the other just getting started and growing worse with each cold. Dr. Coffee always claimed that hearing in these cases can frequently be saved or restored. In any case, sufferers may try it free, without obligation.

Hundreds have used this original treatment successfully. You can use it at home. The results in many cases are quick and convincing. Many state that they feel the difference the first day.

Dr. Coffee, after treating many thousands of people, found that about 90 per cent of deafness and head noises or dullness of hearing is due primarily to ear tubal catarrh or infection. He also found that in many instances the sufferer is not aware of the fact that he is afflicted with catarrh. Consequently he goes through life gradually losing his hearing, not realizing that the condition can be corrected and his hearing saved or completely restored.

Dr. Coffee published a book on deafness and head noises which tells in detail all about the symptoms of many different kinds of deafness.

This book will be sent with free trial course of treatment to everyone who is interested.

Dr. Coffee devoted over 45 years of his life to treating catarrhal deafness, head noises, catarrh, etc. This is the best treatment that he ever found for the relief of ear tubal catarrh, deafness or nasal catarrh, and patients can use it at home. Why don't you try it on your case and see if it won't relieve you? Remember, if your hearing is growing worse with each severe cold, this original home treatment may stop it, relieve the head noises and restore your hearing. Worth trying, isn't it?

Read What Former Sufferers Say:

Relieved Nasal Catarrh

"I was a victim of catarrh for 10 years. I had tried many things but found no relief until I started Dr. Coffee's treatment. Prior to this, I had a constant discharge from my nose and head; I was rapidly becoming deaf. Now I can hear exceedingly well, my head has quit aching, and I feel like a new woman."

Mrs. C. Bloomfield, Alabama

A Wonderful Treatment

"I want to tell you that yours was the most wonderful treatment I have ever used. I had a violent roaring in my head, and felt dizzy constantly. Now I feel much better, and my hearing is practically restored."

Mrs. Ethel Gedbelt, Florida

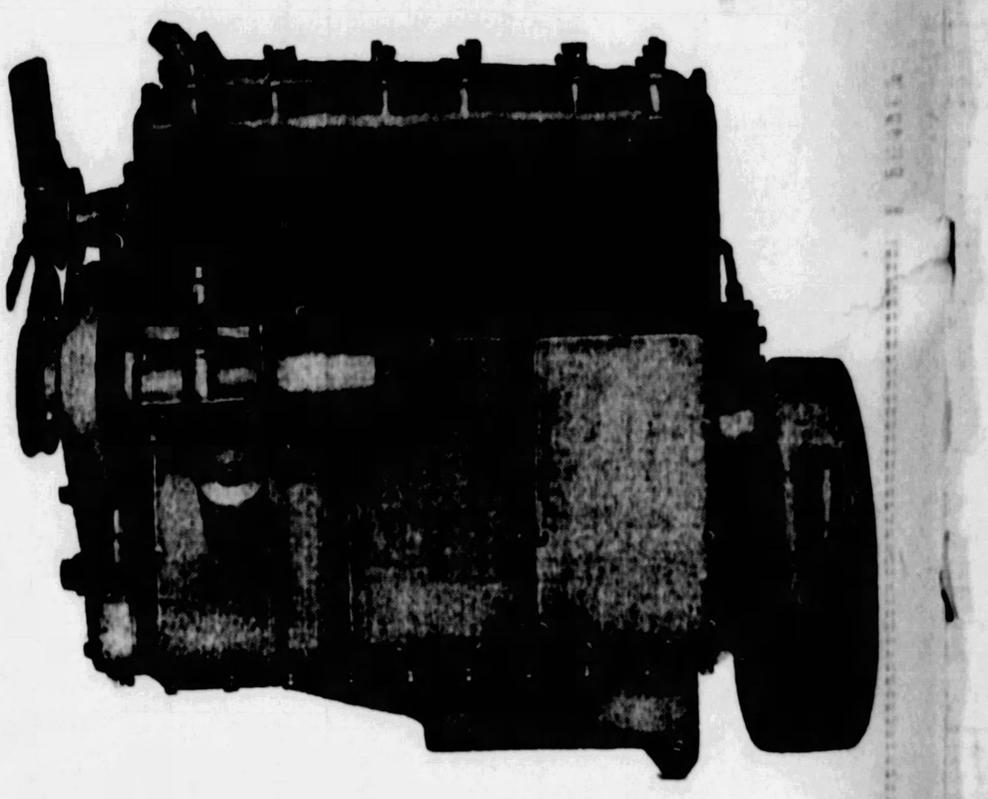
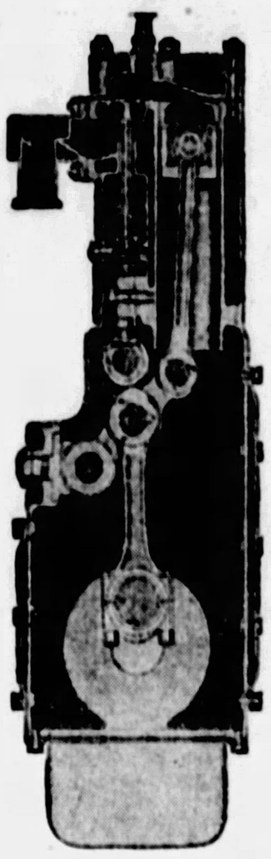
The POWELL LEVER-MOTOR Wins On Every Count!



Easy enough, in these days of superlatives, to talk of "increased this," "matchless that," "greater something" or "superior something else"! But here, in The Powell Lever-Motor is an actuality that every student of things automotive MUST admit offers the solution of the growing problem presented by the increasing call for more power with less fuel in an engine of lighter weight and smaller displacement.



Beside the strongest claims made for the conventional internal combustion motor loom the accomplishments of the Powell Lever-Motor—and the insignificance of mere claims fades in the bright light of actual, tangible achievement.

Power

As shown in the illustration to the left, a lever is interposed between crankshaft and piston in such a manner as to deliver twice the piston pressure to the crankshaft. This single feature of the Powell Lever-Motor marks the first major improvement in design since the inception of internal combustion motors. Never before has the scientifically correct principle of leverage been so utilized. Technical training is not necessary to understand this outstanding advance and its manifold advantages over the old type motor. Power . . . brute power . . . pull, push, speed . . . more power per pound; more power per gallon; more power per engine revolution—these are among the advantages of the Powell Lever-Motor.

High Compression

While the entire industry has been keyed up to the cry for high compression, the conventional motor, because of its very design, has been unable to meet the need. Now, in the Powell Lever-Motor it is possible to use every unit of the highest compression generated in any motor! Think of this higher compression in terms of complete combustion that extracts every atom of energy from fuel. That, in substance, has been the aim of automotive engineers, until now unattained.

Complete Combustion

High compression in a cylinder head designed for turbulence, and complete consumption of the vaporized gases makes for the complete combustion that eliminates carbon deposits, a menace to the motor life and carbon monoxide, a menace to human life. In the Powell Lever-Motor complete combustion means fuel saving and an absence of most motor ills, the majority traceable to power losses incurred during incomplete combustion.

Accessibility

The largest item on any repair bill is for labor. Tearing down and reassembling the motor, after the part requiring attention has been located and fixed, is a lengthy procedure, and costly. Above is pictured the left-hand side of the Powell Lever-Motor; the large side-plates are plainly shown. Through these may be drawn an entire piston-and-rod assembly, as shown to the right. In practice it has been found feasible to remove an entire piston and rod assembly and start away "minus one" in but twenty minutes! Such immediate accessibility of all parts can only mean (1) a saving on labor, (2) an absence of lay-offs, (3) a convenience for the man who makes his own repairs that has not been possible heretofore.

Balance

A new type crankshaft, milled from a solid cylinder of high test steel, and the lever action within the Powell Lever-Motor have brought about such smooth running at all speeds as to make vibration practically obsolete. A balanced thrust of the levers in each of the cylinders and a super-balanced crankshaft accomplishes what can not be attained in the conventional type power plant.

Economy

High compression and complete combustion that utilizes every unit of energy contained in the fuel; greater road speed at slower r. p. m., more power per pound of motorweight, perfect balance that means no vibration—these are factors that contribute to the Powell Lever-Motor's extremely great economy of operation. Longer life, lesser wear, greater mileage, slow motor speed—the Powell Lever-Motor offers solution to the power problem of today and of the future.

A Prophecy

WITHIN a comparatively short time there will be announced passenger cars powered with the Powell Lever-Motor. Details are being withheld, pending the consummation of certain arrangements that will enable motorists to drive these new cars with the assurance of every service usual to automotive distribution.

It seems reasonable to assume that within a short time the entire field dependent upon motorized units will be demanding more and more Powell Lever-Motors. Nation-wide publicity has aroused Engineer, Manufacturer, Marketer and Consumer. All are ready for the ultimate in power plants—all await the Powell Lever-Motor.

Here, in the Powell Lever-Motor, lies the solution of the world's power problems—not for the moment, but for the future as well.

Under terms of a franchise exclusive to their class, a limited number of manufacturers will be licensed by The A. L. Powell Power Company, Inc., in a manner permitting them to power their products with the Powell Lever-Motor.

All classes are open except the light pleasure car, which, due to very favorable conditions surrounding this development, has been reserved so that, in the very near future, the public will be offered a car in the Less-Than-a-Thousand class powered with the Powell Lever-Motor.

Our Engineering Department will co-operate with yours to ascertain the most practical application of Powell Lever-Motor to your product.

Inquiries are solicited either direct or through an intermediary, properly accredited.

A new book, just off the press, fully describes the Powell Lever-Motor in non-technical language. Send for your copy, if interested.

Jeanne Blames Lack Of "Sub" for Break

NEW YORK, March 24.—(AP.)—Miss Jeanne Eagles, actress, whose desertion as star of "Her Cardboard Lover" caused the show to break up in St. Louis, declares her action was caused by refusal of the management to provide her an understudy while she was sick.

Formal charges placed against the actress by Charles Frohman, Inc., and A. H. Woods will be heard before the council of the Actors' Equity Association on April 3. She expressed confidence that she would be vindicated at the hearing.

"I had no understudy," Miss Eagels said. "If I had this thing would never have happened. I have been ill for six weeks. I asked for an understudy more than once, and my request was refused."

Miss Eagels declared there would be no reconciliation with her present management and revealed that she already had entered into an agreement with Sam H. Harris, another producer.

The producers of "Her Cardboard Lover" have filed claim with the Equity Association for $4,412, which they contend comprises expenses incurred in preparation to stage the production in Milwaukee and St. Louis, performances which were not given. Fifteen members of the cast have filed claim against the producers for one week's salary in lieu of notice.

The bill provides for the equal allocation of power throughout the country, 90-day licenses for the more important broadcasting stations, and yearly licenses for amateur and commercial stations.

THE DIVORCE MILL

3 MONTHS ENOUGH

Three months of married life was enough for Mrs. Myrtle Cremo, Robert Cremo, 2602 Fifth avenue, McKeesport, charged in divorce court. Cremo, a street car conductor, said his wife kept late hours and would not tell him where she had been.

FINDS YOUNGER MAN

John W. Eble, 21 years older than his wife, Mrs. Evelyn A. Eble, testified in divorce court that she had found a younger man, and that he asked divorce on the ground of desertion. She told me she liked this younger man better and would rather suffer and care for him, Eble quoted his wife as saying. Eble, who lives at 1246 Sheffield street, North Side, said he had provided his wife every comfort, but that he is 44 and she is 23.

We teach you how; we find a good location for you; we literally start you on the way to big profits; there is no mystery or magic about succeeding with a Tierney Diner; all you need is $2,000 cash and the "Will to Win."

Book of Opportunity

We have written a "Book of Opportunity" that tells you how to succeed—how to make real money—how others (both men and women), with no more training than you have now, are making $5,000 to $10,000 and more each year; they are successful business people; they are enjoying those luxuries of life that you have always wanted—their own car, their own home, a college education for their children, protection for their old age—and are earning it with a Tierney Diner.

Write for this book now!

WOODLAND ROAD

THE RESIDENTIAL LOCATION TO WHICH OTHERS ARE COMPARED

We have recently been authorized to sell in this desirable section a home which is unsurpassed in its exclusiveness and surroundings. One acre of ground with many large trees, shrubbery and well kept lawns. It is situated on a private branch used by only five other families who occupy approximately estate acres. It is more like a park or country estate in the heart of the city. There is no through traffic, and it is undoubtedly the ideal place for children.

The dwelling is dignified in appearance, spacious and well planned, containing thirteen rooms and four baths. The first floor comprises an entrance hall, large living room, library, dining room, kitchen, two pantries and refrigerator room. On the second floor there are five bedrooms, one large dressing room, which could be used for another bedroom or den, and two baths. Three rooms, storage space and bath make up the third floor. The house is in excellent condition—hardwood floors, mahogany woodwork, built-in bookcases in living room, open fireplaces in living room and library, hot water heat, and all modern equipment.

This property although appraised at a much higher figure by one of the largest real estate and trust companies in the city, can be purchased for $75,000. It is a wonderful opportunity for someone wanting a real home in a location where values are always increasing.

Traded Cars

Below are a few of the many reasons why you should buy used trucks at 5444 Center ave.

1. SELECTION—We have the biggest selection of Used Trucks in Western Pennsylvania, ranging in size from ¾-ton to 5-ton, with practically all body types—stakes, dumps, open and covered express, etc.

2. HONEST REPRESENTATION—That means just what it says. Any salesman misrepresenting a truck to you gets fired.

3. RECONDITIONED—Practically every truck is reconditioned and repainted. The good appearance of a truck helps you get a job and its excellent mechanical condition enables you to keep it on the job working and earning.

4. PRICES—We have the best values in town. Due to our extensive reconditioning, some of our prices may be a little bit higher than elsewhere, but remember this—A CHEAP TRUCK IS A CHEAP MAKER. However, we have trucks for all purchasers.

5. TERMS—We do our own financing. For example, on 3 months' time the interest charge is 2%—for 6 months 5%. You can't get money from the bank that cheap.

6. THE WHITE CO.—The character and reputation of THE WHITE CO. is behind the sale of every truck—new or used.

WE INVITE YOUR INSPECTION.

Girls' Orchestra Entertains Miners of Coverdale Barracks

FROLIC—'Tisn't as brutal as it looks. Dorothy Harstook and Grace Hays were just engaging in a little frolic when big Ben W. Smith, Bethel township constable, walked in and asked 'em what it was all about. "It's about time you asked," reprimanded Dot, "We are entertaining the women and children of this barricks—Coverdale, you call it—I believe, and they are enjoying it. Behave yourself!" And Constable Smith helped the fight to a finish.

LEADER—Give the little girl a hand, boys! This is Nellie Jay and she took her Jay Birds, who frolic every day at the Schenley Theater, to Coverdale.

LIKES IT—F'instance, here's Baby Elizabeth Kroppa, whose father's a striking miner at Coverdale, but she's enjoying the music offered by the Jay Birds as much as if her papa were president of the biggest coal company in the world. Nellie Jay, director of the orchestra, borrowed Elizabeth for a moment, and both are having a high old time. Members of the orchestra shown are Adda Johnson, Ruth Singer and Dorothy Hartsook.

Clean Brooder Means Health for Chickens

If the brooder to be used is not a new one, it should be thoroughly cleaned. A good way to clean the brooder is to thoroughly scrape it, removing all dirt and rust, and then give it a coat of stove paint. Such a procedure will also add to the life of the stove. Those who use oil-burning brooders should carefully inspect the oil reservoir and feed pipe for leaks. The burner should be carefully cleaned to remove all accumulated soot. A brooder well cared for will give many years of service.

All feeding equipment that has been used in previous years should be scraped to remove accumulated dirt and then soaked in disinfectant. If new feeding equipment is necessary two factors should be considered in its selection: Is the equipment easy to clean, and will it prevent chicks from wasting the feed or spilling the water?

CLEAN CHICKS

When the brooder house, brooder and hoppers, and fountains have been cleaned as suggested, it is time to prepare the brooding equipment for clean chicks. The brooder house should be moved to clean ground. The brooder should be put in and the fire started at least a week before the clean chicks are expected. This will dry the house and also give the operator experience in running the brooder. When the house is dry about an inch of clean sand should be spread over the brooder house floor, and covered with clean litter.

The question is often asked, "What is the best litter to use?" There is no best litter, however. If one knows what is required of litter, he or she can choose the material best adapted for the purpose.

The requirements of good litter are: Light in weight, so the droppings will work to the floor, cheap in price, so it can be cleaned frequently and replaced with new litter. The litter must be clean and free from mold or mustiness.

In considering the above requirements of good litter, we find that such materials as shavings, straw and hay meet the requirements. Shavings approach the ideal litter. They are light in weight, not expensive and easily replaced.

Straw is another material that is very satisfactory for litter. In using straw one must be very careful that it is not musty or mouldy. The straw should always be cut in short lengths, about two inches long, when it is used for litter in the brooder house. If the straw is not cut, it will be matted down by the chicks and thus lose its value as a litter. Any straw such as oats, rye or wheat straw may serve as litter for the brooder house. What has been said of straw applies to hay. Alfalfa or clover hay are, no doubt, the best to use for litter.

The spread of bacillary white diarrhea, coccidiosis and intestinal worms takes place to a large extent through the use of dirty litter.

IMPORTANCE

When one thoroughly appreciates the foregoing statement, it is hardly necessary to say anything further in regard to the importance of clean litter. Not only is it important to start with clean litter, but it should be kept clean by frequent cleaning. One important rule to follow in your brooding work this year is clean the brooder house every five days. This means removing all litter and sand and replacing with clean sand and clean litter.

The fruits of your labor will be lost if you fail to practice cleanliness throughout the brooding period. Don't forget all litter should be cleaned every five days. Water and milk fountains should be cleaned daily and feed hoppers at least every five days. Practicing cleanliness throughout the growing period will reduce mortality and result in healthy pullets in the fall.

Have you a record sheet for each brood of chicks? If not, you may secure additional copies from your county agricultural agent.

Chicken Cackles

WE understand the Mutual Poultry Association is considering bringing the East Pittsburgh show to the city next fall.

Joe Hilldorfer, the veteran breeder of Giant Black Minorcas, has added peafowl, White Leghorns and German police dogs to the pedigreed list of his Saxonburg farm.

We understand that Harry Singer, the hustling secretary of the Mutual Poultry Association, now that the income tax season is over, will get back to the firing line again.

Walter Boldesberger, the White Leghorn man from out Bridgeville way, is busy filling orders for day-old chicks.

We haven't heard from Judge Auerswald yet in regard to the insinuation that he has been crossing his famous Barred Rocks with a black breed.

Jake Bedell, who breeds blue Buff Leghorns out in Millvale, is commencing to cash in on the excellent reputation he has built up for his birds. Jake is a perfectionist.

There is talk already of the East Pittsburghers getting together for an outing this summer. Who will furnish the farm?

SEA MARRIAGE RULED ILLEGAL

CHICAGO, March 24.—Judge Joseph Sabath, who has heard more than 20,000 divorces in his many years on the bench, this afternoon handed down a decision by which he ruled that marriage performed by a ship captain on the high seas was illegal.

Sabath ruled that the marriage of David Maynard, former attache of the League of Nations, to Willa M. Evans, was void.

The opinion holds, however, that despite the fact the marriage was without a license and that the ceremony was not authorized by the District of Columbia, the marriage was not necessarily void.

Judge Sabath held that the license requirement is directory but not mandatory and the fact the captain is not mentioned as having the power of law would not make it absolutely void, although voidable, taking the stand that the marriage would be legal unless nullified by decree.

Maynard and Miss Evans were married July 1, 1926, while en route from England to France. The wife did not contest the suit for annulment.

LINDY RUSHED, REDUCES TIME

WASHINGTON, March 24.—(AP.)—There was such a rush of business at Col. Charles A. Lindbergh's aerial sight-seeing stand today that he had to shorten his trips to 10 minutes each to take care of his customers.

It was Lindy's last day as host to members of Congress, their families and relatives down to distant cousins, and he turned down urgent pleas that he carry his air circus over through Sunday. He even backed out of an invitation he had accepted to attend an enlisted men's smoker at Bolling Field Monday night. Lindy said he had urgent business in other cities, but with that extreme reticence that has enveloped him of late he declined to go into details.

Mrs. Dwight Davis, wife of the Secretary of War, and her daughter, Cynthia, were among today's passengers. Another daughter, Alice, was on yesterday's list.

Representative La Guardia, New York, who served as an Army aviator during the war, was the only member today who rode in the cockpit with the trans-Atlantic pilot. Lindbergh at first demurred, explaining to field attaches that others who had flown at his side during the past week had "talked him to death."

WEDS BUTLER; HAS NEW WILL

NEW YORK, March 24.—(INS.)—Since she startled society by eloping with her butler March 5, Mrs. J. Pierrepont Edwards, Westchester County great-grandmother of 72 summers, drew a fresh will disposing of her $5,000,000 fortune, it was said today.

The farthest her daughter, Mrs. Robert J. Turnbull, would go toward verification of the report was:

"Of course, mother's marriage will affect the old will."

Before she became the bride of the 43-year-old butler, John Burden, former Scottish soldier, the dowager passed many hours in conference with her bankers.

Mrs. Turnbull, scoffing at rumors that her mother's alliance has caused a family tempest, said:

"She phoned us and we had a long talk. She's very happy, when she told us so, we were happy, too."

The newlyweds are avoiding the curiosity of their neighbors by staying within the confines of the Edwards estate.

BOMBS HURLED IN BUENOSAIRES

BUENOS AIRES, March 24.—(A. P.)—Bomb and petard explosions in and near the capital put police on the alert today to prevent further disorders.

A strike of several labor groups, which are demanding the release of an anarchist named Radowitzky who was imprisoned many years ago for participating in a bomb outrage, is in progress. Police believe the bombings of yesterday are connected with it.

A bomb exploded on the railroad tracks near Buenos Aires as a passenger train passed over it. One guard was slightly injured. The train continued to its destination.

A powerful bomb was found underneath the seat in a car at a station of the underground railway system. Julio Martin, 15, is credited with having averted a major disaster in finding it in a crowded car.

Tramway operators have refused to join in the strike and the planting of the bomb is laid to terrorist methods to force them to do so. Several petard were exploded at various parts of the city.

Pre-College Parley Held at Sewickley Y

One hundred seniors from high schools throughout Western Pennsylvania attended a pre-college conference at the Sewickley Y. M. C. A., which started Friday and will close this afternoon. The value of a college education was discussed, along with the possibility of success without it. Speakers included men prominent in educational work.

Plan to Cancel Jones' $587,000 Insurance

Receivers for the Bertha Consumers Company are contemplating cancellation of $587,000 insurance upon the life of John H. Jones, president, one of the receivers. The policies are carried by and payable to the Bertha company, and the receivers wish to apply the surrender value of the policies to the redemption of approximately $80,000 worth of the company's first mortgage bonds.

Federal Judge R. M. Gibson yesterday, on motion by counsel for the receivers, Fred E. Powers and Mr. Jones, granted the receivers permission to enter negotiations with the New York Trust Company, trustee under certain indenture of mortgage, given by the Bertha Consumers Company, June 1, 1924, for the application of the net proceeds of the surrender value of the policies for retirement of as many bonds as possible. The transaction, the court order sets forth, must be subject to approval of the board of Bertha directors.

The policies, ranging from $10,000 to $100,000, are with 11 companies, and the annual premiums amount to $27,700, the petition on the motion cites. For interest and loans upon the policies the company pays approximately $4,350. The petition avers that the outstanding first mortgage bonds amount to $972,000.

REALTY TRADE SHOWS GAIN

Real state market activity for February was measured by an index figure of 189, according to the compilation made monthly by the National Association of Real Estate Boards. The compilation is made from official figures of transfers and conveyances recorded in 41 typical cities. The index is nine points higher than the index for February, 1927. It is 14 points higher than the index for January of the present year.

The association's compilation uses for its base the average number of transfers and conveyances recorded in the 41 cities during the corresponding month of the years 1916-25. Since it does not include in this base the years 1926-27, it is pointed out that in interpreting the index the figure found for any month is comparable with that of the corresponding month of the previous year, but is incomparable with that of the month directly preceding it.

The index record for the last 12 months follows:

February, 1927, 180; March, 1927, 172; April, 1927, 166; May, 1927, 156; June, 1927, 181; July, 1927, 167; August, 1927, 163; September, 1927, 158; October, 1927, 151; November, 1927, 139; December, 1927, 163; January, 1928, 175; February, 1928, 189.

How One Family Bought The "Priscilla" WARDWAY Home When They Had Only a Building Lot and $400 in Cash

The price of materials for their complete home, including plumbing, heating, electric wiring and fixtures delivered to their freight station, was $2200. They estimated that the cost of labor and masonry materials would be $2100. The value of their building lot was $700. We loaned them $3000—or $800 in addition to the cost of materials—to help pay for construction work. So with this money and the $400 they had, they were in a position to hire all the work done which they couldn't do themselves. In this way they soon became the owners of a splendid home which actually cost them ONLY $5000!

IMPORTANT! They had only $400 of their own to put into construction work—and still the largest monthly payment on their "Priscilla" Home, including 6 per cent interest, was only $30. This amount was reduced every month.

MISSIONS GAME IS CALLED OFF; PLAYERS HOLD BRISK SESSION

Fraser and Hinchman Give Squad Tough Workout After Clash Is Postponed.

Morning and Afternoon Contests Scheduled Sunday in 'Frisco Park.

By CHARLES J. DOYLE,
Sun-Telegraph Staff Correspondent.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 24.—The game scheduled for this afternoon between the Pirates and Missions Bells was called off by the Missions management shortly after the two clubs appeared for their practice sessions. A drizzling rain was falling and the ground was wet when the local officials decided it would not be proper to start the game.

The day was beneficial to the Pirates, nevertheless. Bush was bouncing around like a bundle of nerves he is, anxious to avoid another day of idleness. Donie, accordingly, ordered all hands to the clubhouse early and by noon many of the players were at the field. They were limbering up shortly after this hour.

FUNGO PRACTICE HELD

The entire squad was able to go through a course of throwing sprouts and after the pitchers had finished up their workout, the more energetic of the others remained on the wet field for a tussle with Chick Fraser and Bill Hinchman.

The two big scouts took a flock of baseballs for fungo purposes. They "shagged" the exuberant ones until they had worked into a fine state of perspiration. The drizzle grew stronger as the afternoon progressed, but many of the boys refused to leave the field.

The local management was thinking about tomorrow when it made such a determined effort to play to-

Speaking Of Speed, Bucs Have It for '28 Flag Race

LLOYD IS FAST— The Pirates no longer boast that peerless base-runner, Max Carey, and they have lost a good one in Kiki Cuyler, but they will not lack for zip on the paths in their quest for another pennant this year. For instance, this young fellow, Lloyd Waner, appears to be due for a big season in this department.

Local Floor Stars Extend American League Champions

By JULIUS LEVIN.

THE New York Celtics, world professional basketball champions, dropped off in Pittsburgh Saturday night long enough to give 1,100 Western Pennsylvania fans, who packed the spacious Duquesne University gymnasium to capacity, a thorough demonstration of how the popular winter indoor sport should be played and nosed out a 32-to-26 victory over the former Morry five.

Presenting a somewhat changed lineup as a result of the numerous injuries they suffered in the world series games with the Fort Wayne

RANGERS BOW, 4-2, IN WILD SCORING FINALE ON GARDEN ICE

Same Two Teams to Clash in Cup Matches in New York Tuesday and Thursday.

Five Goals are Scored in Opening Period—Detroit Downs Boston, 7-2.

By CARL W. SHATTO.

FLASHING a brand of play worthy of champions, Pittsburgh's ice Pirates clinched third place and a place in the post-season playoffs for the world ice title by overwhelming the New York Rangers, 4 to 2, at Duquesne Garden Saturday night.

The game, the last of the regular season, marked the close of one of the most sensational drives in the annals of the ice sport. Running a poor last at mid-season, the Pirates suddenly braced and put on a "comeback" that carried them right into the titular event. Had the Bucs lost to the Gothamites, they would have lost their series position, for Detroit won and threatened the locals to the last. The locals' final standing is third place, one-half game back of the second-place Rangers.

PLAY IS THRILLING

The brand of play, seldom equaled here, was right in keeping with the importance of the clash. The first period was a perfect fury of action, from the first minute to the last, and in the second canto the Bucs kept up the pressure continuously. The third and final session

CELTICS WIN SOCCER APPEAL

National Body Finds Pittsburgh Club at Fault, Local Officials Learn.

"The appeal of the Pittsburgh Celtics has been sustained, the Pittsburgh Soccer Club found guilty of misconduct on the field of play, and the actions of Referee Sherrard indorsed."

These are the leading passages of a communication received by Secretary Pat Donohue of the West Penn Soccer Football Association Saturday, a copy of which also was received by Manager Tom Edwards of the Pittsburgh Celtics, from the secretary of the United States Football Association, and was the decision of the appeals committee of the national body regarding the now famous case that caused the upheaval in Western Pennsylvania soccer circles and resulted in the removal of the president and secretary of the association at that time.

The long-awaited result of the protest to the national body caused jubilation in the Lawrenceville district among the legion of fans, and concurs entirely with the editorial written in the columns of the Sun-Telegraph at that time.

The only fly in the ointment is what is the status of the case now. The much-talked-of game was in the third round of the West Penn cup away back in November. Pittsburgh had a decision handed to them following the riot at that game, for which the blame has been officially laid at the door of the Pittsburgh Soccer Club. The German club eliminated Pittsburgh, and the Pittsburgh Rovers dropped the Germans out of the tourney. Heidelberg then defeated Pittsburgh Rovers in the final. However, Manager Edwards stated last night that both clubs were notified before the playing of the final game, that a favorable decision to the Celtics would put them back in the race. However, this will be settled at the meeting of the West Penn next Tuesday night.

Mullen, Fugazy Join Hands To Clear Heavy Situation

CHICAGO, March 24.—(INS.)—Promoter Jim Mullen announced here this afternoon he had signed as a partner with Promoter Humbert J. Fugazy of New York to promote the interests of boxing in Chicago and New York and to find the logical contender to challenge Gene Tunney for a championship bout.

Following a conference this afternoon, the following announcement was issued:

"It will be the policy of this combination to produce the popular choice for heavyweight honors and not contend for the title with a hand-picked opponent.

"In the past, heavyweight bouts in which the title has been involved have been, in the main, one-sided.

TO SIGN CONTENDERS

"Fugazy and Mullen will sign all logical contenders for two fights only, one in New York and one in Chicago. This method will give the public in America's biggest boxing centers an opportunity to judge for themselves who is the real contender.

"Fugazy and Mullen will not tie up any fighter for an indefinite period of time. They believe that two fights should be sufficient for the public to judge the merits of the respective challengers.

"Fugazy is now building the world's greatest sports arena in

SHARPE BACK AS GRID COACH

Former Yale Mentor Signs To Tutor Washington University Eleven.

ST. LOUIS, March 24.—(AP.)—Dr. Al Sharpe, former coach of football teams at Yale and Cornell universities, today was named director of athletics and head football coach at Washington University here for next season. Dr. Sharpe now is head of the Ithaca School of Physical Education at Ithaca, N. Y.

Sharpe was a great athlete at Yale in his day and after graduating in 1902 earned recognition as coach of the Penn Charter School near Philadelphia. In 1911 he became head football coach at Cornell and turned out several strong elevens. His 1915 team was undefeated, winning from both Harvard and Pennsylvania.

Yale bid for his services and in 1919 not only named him head football coach to succeed Tad Jones, who had resigned, but also appointed him athletic director. The double burden apparently proved too much and the 1919 Yale team was none too successful. Jones was called back as football coach, but Sharpe remained as athletic director until 1921 when he accepted his present post at Ithaca.

Amateur Cue Star Killed by Friend

BALTIMORE, March 24.—(INS.)—William L. Unduch, 54, former amateu billiard champion of Maryland, was shot and killed early today by Webster M. Kefauver, a close friend.

A quarrel preceded the shooting, Kefauver told police, who found him kneeling by the dead body and mumbling a prayer. Both had been drinking, police said.

MIKE DUNDEE of Rock Island, Ill., who fights U. S. Carpentier Motor Square Garden Monday night, is a former Pittsburgh .. having lived on the South Side until he moved with his parents to the Middle West less than 10 years ago. He did not do any boxing while here. A sister, Mrs. Francis Lamanna, resides in Nineteenth street, South Side.

Mike also is a cousin of Phil Gentille, the local basketball player. Dundee's real name is Mike Posateri.

REAL SPEED BOY—Then there's George Grantham, the first baseman. George is one of the fastest men in the majors and will be a menace every time he gets on the sacks.

LITTLE EXPRESS—Sparky Adams, the new second baseman of the Corsairs, obtained from the Cubs in the Cuyler deal, figures to give Lloyd Waner a great fight for the base-running honors of the National League champions. Speed, did you say? Why, man alive, the Bucs have it to burn!

TWO MORE—Pie Traynor is no small shucks when it comes to speed in getting around, although he's a comparatively big fellow. And Adam Comorosky, who is being groomed to hold down the left field berth, is a speedy lad himself.

Smith, Manos Win Senior Handball Doubles Crown

SMITH and Manos, representing the Downtown Y. M. C. A., had little difficulty in winning the Allegheny Mountain Association A. A. U. senior doubles championship Saturday afternoon when they defeated Winkelman and Harris, representing the Young Men's Hebrew Association, in the final matches of the tournament, staged on the courts of the Pittsburgh Athletic Association.

Smith and Manos took the lead at the start of the first match and were never in danger of relinquishing it, the score ending 21 to 2.

The second match likewise was a walkaway for the Downtown athletes, who defeated their rivals, 21-6.

Dance to Raise Funds for Club

An oldtime dance and bingo party with a door prize will be staged for the benefit of the Homewood-Brushton Baseball Club of the County League in the Bryn Mawr auditorium, Wednesday evening, April 18. Kemmler's orchestra will provide the music.

The party will be the final function of a series to raise funds for the County Leaguers. A boxing show and another dance got the club out of debt recently and the money to be realized at the next event will give the organization a stake for the season.

Two games have been played in the post-season series, St. Josephs winning the first on their court and St. Michaels turning the trick a few nights later.

Missions Spurn Morrison For Sale Price of $7,500

By CHARLES J. DOYLE,
Sun-Telegraph Staff Correspondent.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 24.—The Pirates are having a hard time disposing of Johnny Morrison, who for months has been serving a sentence as punishment for leaving the team last season. From a reliable source here, I learn that the Pittsburgh club offered Morrison to the Mission Bells for $7,500, but the Bells are said to have refused.

Morrison doubtless could win in the majors, as he owns a curve that is noted throughout the circuit. But when the magnates want to rule a player off, they apparently know how to go about it. Johnny recently applied to Judge Landis for reinstatement.

Morrison's offense was quite serious. He was suffering with a sore hand at the time he refused to go eastward with the team. The trivial injury, however, was not the source of Morrison's trouble. Johnny evidently was not satis-

Edgewood to Honor Champ Floor Squad

Edgewood High School is planning to hold an elaborate banquet for the members of the girls basketball squad, who recently won the championship of Allegheny county by scoring a victory over Aspinwall High.

The squad, under the direction of Coach Walter Pickett, enjoyed a successful season, winning 17 out of 19 games played this winter. Wilkinsburg and Duquesne were the only teams to score victories over Edgewood this year.

Edgewood scored two victories in the tournament to decide the championship, defeating Robinson township in the first and Aspinwall in the second.

Chicago Fair Gets Big Ten Grid "Series"

Associated Press.

CHICAGO, March 24.

ANOTHER step in what is planned as the greatest athletic program ever carried out by any nation was announced today as a plan to have all Big Ten football teams play a series of games at Soldier Field in 1933 in connection with the world's fair.

Assurance has been given by Maj. John L. Griffith, athletic commissioner of the Western Conference, that the Big Ten will co-operate.

Many other universities also will make an exception to their rules of not playing away from home and come to Chicago, said Dr. A. D. Albert, associate director of the organization work.

It also was announced today that a magnificent Greek theater seating 50,000 would be built at the edge of Lake Michigan.

Waynesburg, Wheeling Fives Win in Tourney

BRADDOCK HIGH DEFEATED IN FINAL ROUND

Central Catholic High of Wheeling Captures Class B Honors at Waynesburg.

Charleroi Withdraws When Star Player Is Protested By East Fairmont Team.

WAYNESBURG, Pa., March 24.—The most successful basketball tournament event ever conducted in this section of the state ended tonight with Waynesburg High School winning the championship in Class A and Central Catholic High of Wheeling carrying off first honors in Class B.

Waynesburg and Braddock went into the final tonight with chances about even. At the end of the first quarter, Braddock had an edge of two points, but by the end of the half Waynesburg was leading, 17 to 10, and during the second half the Braddock quintet was not able to cut down the margin.

The contest between East Washington and Central Catholic of Wheeling, W. Va., was much closer. The score was tied at least a dozen times. At no time was there more than four points between the two teams. The entire tourney was featured by close contests and spirited playing.

TROPHIES PRESENTED

Following the final games, cups were presented to the winning teams in each class and also cups to the two runners-up. Each member of the two winning teams received gold basketballs, while the members of the two runners-up received silver basketballs. The cups and balls were presented by Dr. Paul R. Stewart, president of Waynesburg College.

Charleroi High withdrew from Class A, today after winning from East Fairmont High last night. Following its defeat of East Fairmont, the losing team raised the question of the eligibility of Decoster, the star player on the Charleroi team, and Charleroi decided not to continue in the tourney for the sake of harmony. This allowed East Fairmont to meet Waynesburg in the semi-finals. The Zook men had no trouble winning from the West Virginia boys, 21-11. The lineups:

SPORTING REVIEW OF THE WEEK

Five-Game Series Against Cubs Starting Next Thursday to Be First Real Test of Pirates—Bouts With Missions and Seals Used for Getting Final Line on Recruits—Club Stronger Than Last Year and Better Qualified to Win Pennant—Purchase of Mulligan Helps—Other Infield Material to Be Cut Down—Rookies Begin Annual March Back to Minors—Lose Their Gilt When the Veterans Get Into Stride.

by JAMES J. LONG

ONLY one week more remains of the Pirates' scheduled stay in California, and it will be one of unusual importance.

Donie Bush and his pennant chasers are due to start Eastward next Sunday, but in the meantime they are to engage in a series of games with the Chicago Nationals that will represent their first real test of the spring.

The Cubs are to be met in Los Angeles next Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, and a fifth game with the Bruins will be played in Phoenix, Ariz., on the following day.

In that series we are likely to find the first real major league baseball of the spring, with the Pirates for the first time displaying something like the form that is expected to carry them through to a second successive pennant and their third flag in four straight years. It will be a real test against major league opposition.

Defeats Mean Nothing

Thus far the Buccaneers have not been performing brilliantly in the matter of games won. They did well against the Missions, but against San Francisco they fared poorly in the main.

However, games won or lost in these spring exhibition series do not mean a thing, and there was no cause for the anxiety manifested in some parts of fan circles over the defeats suffered at the hands of the Seals. Those games were arranged for conditioning purposes, to enable Manager Bush to get a final line on his new timber as well as to work out some new angles in his playing policy for the year.

Look back over the box scores and you will find that in the great majority of the games Donie used his new twirlers. That's why the Pirates were failing to win. They were making a goodly number of runs and hits themselves on most occasions, but the boys they had on the mound, plucked from leagues far below Class AA, were unable to hold the coast leaguers in check.

That's what Bush wanted to learn, in addition to giving two sets of players plenty of workouts, so it may easily be seen that the loss of most of the games did not defeat his purpose.

Comorosky in Outfield

The tilts with the Missions and the Seals also enabled the Pirate skipper to draw near to a decision on several other points in connection with the team.

One of these was the selection of a third outfielder. It looks very much like Adam Comorosky now for the extra job in the outfield.

When the fleet-footed Pole started to hit he forged far ahead of all other candidates, and if he keeps it up there is no doubt that he will start the season on a regular job. There never was any question that he could do all the other things that an outfielder is required to do, as in fielding skill, throwing ability and speed he had all his rivals outclassed.

Perhaps if Comorosky doesn't continue to hit, Barnhart or Scott will dislodge him some time after the season opens, but at present it looks like a certainty that Adam is going to start.

Fred Fussell, left-hander, seems to have come through as a pitcher, too. He and Ervin Brame are new hurlers who will stick, augmenting the old regular staff made up of Kremer, Miljus, Hill, Grimes, Meadows and Dawson.

Ralston Hemsley also looks as if he would be retained for work behind the bat. Hitting improvement was all that he needed, as he looks like a born catcher and ought to develop into a topnotcher.

MULLIGAN AID

AND the players named above do not represent all the new strength. There is Eddie Mulligan, veteran infielder, who must not be overlooked. If for no other reason, the Corsairs' trip to San Francisco must be rated as a profitable one because it put them in touch with a situation that made it possible for them to buy the release of Mulligan, who was a holdout and dissatisfied with his coast league berth.

The Bucs picked up one of the most valuable men in the minors in Mulligan. He is 32 years old, and has been up twice before with the Cubs and White Sox, but he still is a valuable ball player nevertheless, in addition to being a two-fisted fighter, and is certain to help the Rovers a whole lot in reserve roles.

Mulligan's coming means another problem for Manager Bush to solve, as he already had Joe Cronin and Dick Bartell for extra infield duty, not to mention Joe Harris. It is safe to say that Donie is not going to keep them all. Camp reports for some time have indicated that Bartell will be retained.

Much New Strength

It isn't hard to work up a feeling of optimism when you consider all that new strength.

If the Pirates were good enough to win the pennant last year with a gaping hole at second base, a pitching staff that needed bolstering, and an outfield position that was sometimes weak in hitting and sometimes in fielding, it follows that they ought to have a much better chance for the flag this year.

The old pitching staff of Kremer, Miljus, Hill, Meadows and Dawson is as good as it was, with Grimes, Fussell and Brame added.

The second base gap has been plugged by the acquisition of Sparky Adams, whose sensational work has made him the outstanding player of the practice period thus far. Besides, there is such other new strength as is represented by Scott, Comorosky, Hemsley and Bartell, to say nothing of the improvement in Glenn Wright and Earl Smith, and the prospect that they are going to keep it up.

There is no good reason apparent why a team that has been bolstered all around in that fashion should not be reckoned as having the finest kind of a chance of repeating its pennant victory of 1927, particularly as the two clubs that are looked upon as its main rivals, the Giants and Cardinals, have lost strength instead of gaining any.

Cards Appear Losers

New York will be up against the same trouble that harrassed Pittsburgh last year in trying to fill a hole at second base, and it would be folly to say that Rogers Hornsby's bat and the runs it knocks in during a season will not be sorely missed.

As for St. Louis, the Cards appear to have lost considerable in the deal made this week whereby they traded their regular third baseman, Lester Bell, for Andy High of Boston and some cash on the side.

Any time a club demands and gets something on the side in a trade, it is an admission that in the matter of playing material it is giving up more than it receives.

That goes for Bell and High. The latter can hit but as a fielder he is not in Bell's class and even on the Boston club was counted upon only for utility purposes. Manager McKechnie says he will not play High, but will use Roscoe Holm as a regular third baseman.

Holm worked chiefly as an outfielder last year and played only nine games at third base.

That is not enough to qualify him for a regular job there on a pennant-seeking club, and a whole lot of games can be lost at third base if it isn't properly protected. From this distance the deal looks like a very good one for Pittsburgh. As anything that weakens the Cardinals is bound to help the Buccaneers.

Besides, the Cards have trouble at shortstop. Tommy Thevenow's broken right foot is not coming around. He has not been able to play through a full practice game this spring.

If Thevenow can't start, as is possible, Maranville will have to be used at shortstop, and local fans know from experience just about how long Maranville can be depended upon to help win a pennant.

ROOKIES FADE

THE big parade is on over the drab trail back to the minors. The time has arrived for weeding out or cutting down by the major league baseball clubs, and from now on hardly a day will pass that will not be marked by news bulletins announcing the cutting loose of timber that has been on trial under the watchful eyes of big league managers since the annual spring training camps were pitched more than a month ago.

That's an annual sad note in the baseball doings as the teams begin to draw near to the stage at which they will go to the post for the start in the major pennant races. It spells the blasting of many an ambition, the shattering of many a hope, the proverbial rude awakening from many a dream.

Just a short month ago these rookies were elated over the fact that they had been picked out of the minors for tryouts in the main tent.

They were going up where the big money was obtainable, up where the attention of the whole nation would be upon their doings, and they thrilled when they thought of the day when some great play of theirs would bring the roar of the crowd to their ears as a reward for their efforts.

Back Whence They Came

But it's all over now for many of them. They have had their shot at the big stuff and failed.

Some few have lingered, of course. A small percentage has made good, as usual, and will hold down jobs in the fast set this season, but for the great majority these are dark days.

At a single clip last week the Washington club released no fewer than 10 recruits, another dropped four heads into the basket at one swing of the ax, and others are gradually reducing their working forces to far less impressive proportions than they presented when they started for the conditioning grounds, from five to six weeks ago.

It's an old story to baseball followers. They have read the same tale and seen the big parade every spring for a long stretch of years, and it will continue to be an annual feature of the game as long as it is played.

For some of the boys, of course, the disappointment at not making good in the majors is only temporary. They have shown the stuff, but they are still too green and inexperienced to be of any value in the big show, so they are being sent back to stronger minor leagues than they played in before in order that they may have the rough edges removed from them and gain such knowledge of the finer points of the sport as they may still lack.

Some of these will fail again, even when they are brought up again. They will not have improved at the rate expected, and will be shipped back once more for further development that they may never be able to show.

Others Will Return

Others will pick up enough new knowledge in a year to qualify for the majors, and others may arrive eventually after a series of ups and downs between the majors and the minors during which they may be shifted about from one club to another.

But for a great many of the spring recruits, this is the finish. They are going back with one-way tickets. They have not shown anything like the amount of promise required to warrant a big league club in keeping a string to a young player on the "farm." They have what are known as fatal defects, and they will never again figure on the roster in a big league training camp.

These have not even the thought that they may return some time to console them in their dreary march back to the bushes. They have learned what so many have learned before them, and what so many others will learn after them, that in big league baseball many are called, but few are chosen.

VETS RALLY

ONLY a couple of weeks ago some of these boys who are now hitting the back track to the thickets were being hailed as modern wonders who could not fail to set the big leagues on fire and change the complexion of the pennant races.

According to the enthusiastic correspondents in the various training camps there were second Wagners who could do everything that the greatest of them all could do in his prime; second Johnsons with blinding speed; second Mathewsons with an unhittable fadeaway; second Cobbs on the bases; second Speakers in the outfield, and even second Ruths and Hornsbys were daily driving the ball over the most distant fences in the Southland.

But now these very same phenoms who were burning up Dixie are included among the cast-offs that are being shipped back to the sticks.

Easy Going at First

That's another side to the ancient story that is just as familiar to the fans as the side about the huge crop of failures. Every year they have read that stuff about the second Wagners, Johnsons, Cobbs and others, and every year in close to 100 per cent of the cases it has turned out to be the bunk.

It's all due to the fact that the recruits look good from all angles in the early stages of spring training because the going happens to be rather easy at that time.

They shape up so well in comparison with the regulars that frequently it is reported that this rookie or that rookie cannot be kept off the team and he seems destined to oust some seasoned regular, long considered one of the best men in the big leagues, from a regular position in the lineup.

The explanation is that the recruit has little or no opposition. He is out there playing his head off in an attempt to impress the manager favorably, and no one tries to stop him.

If he is a pitcher he is cutting loose with all that he possesses, and if he is an infielder or outfielder he is hustling as if in a game upon which a pennant were at stake, making long hits, beating out bunts and tearing around the bases like Billy Hamilton or Ty Cobb.

It is an unusual condition that makes it possible, however. The rookie is getting away with his brilliant stuff because the wise old leaguers are going along at an easy clip, getting into condition by degrees and refusing to take any chances on injuring themselves. They are not required to show the manager what they can do. He knows.

Gilt Peels Off

Young players, as a rule can do just about as they please, therefore.

The speed pitchers and the slab artists with fadeaways and other unusual deliveries are getting by with them because the old fellows' eyes have not been sharpened and because they still have winter kinks in their bodies and limbs.

The great base stealers who are piling up a record number of purloined sacks are enabled to do so because no one tries to stop them, and the long hitters are making terrific drives and fat batting averages because the old pitchers are merely lobbing the ball to the plate with nothing on it but the cover.

But as soon as the warmer weather begins to thaw out the vets, there is a change. When the older men start to put a little pep in their work the brilliance of the recruits fades. It is found that the pitchers can't get the ball over the corners of the plate, and if they do get it over the vets murder it; the hitting stops because the old pitchers are able now to put something on the ball, and the great base-running ceases because the youngsters are not even getting on first base.

They looked good in comparison at first only because the veterans were not trying. Their brilliance was only gilt and it has peeled off.

HOCKEY HURT

AS SOON as the play-offs and the "world series" in hockey are over, Pittsburgh ice fans will get the answer to the big puzzle involving the local team, which has been keeping everybody guessing for two months.

They will learn then whether or not the club has been sold, where it is going to play next season, and what persons were responsible for all the contradictory reports that were in circulation for several weeks.

But it may be said for many of them that they don't care very much now what the answer may be. They don't care whether the club stays here or not, if it is going to be operated under such conditions as were indicated by developments of the last few days.

For since it was announced that if Pittsburgh finished in a tie with Detroit for third place, there would be no play-off, but that Detroit would be given the position on total goals, and since the subsequent bulletin that in event of Pittsburgh's getting in the play-offs all games would be played in New York instead of the Pirates being given a share of home contests, the fans have become convinced that sport is being made secondary to the dollar sign.

If they can't have clean sport

LEAGUE SOCCER SEASON CLOSES HERE SUNDAY

Owls and Thistles Clash in Final Battle for West Penn Junior Cup.

Keen Interest Shown in Heidelberg's Invasion of St. Louis Next Week.

By TOM BIRKS.

WHILE the windup of the season's league games is scheduled Sunday, the principal battle is the playing of the West Penn junior cup final at Gallatin, where the Bridgeville Owls, of the Chartiers Vallege League, will meet the Donora Thistles, of the Monongahela Valley League.

This game should prove quite a battle. The Owls have been going good and as champions should fight hard. However, Donora Thistles are having their first taste of cup tie finals and are sure to play a bang-up game.

TWO GAMES STAND OUT

Fans around the Pittsburgh district have a few league games to become enthused over. Two games will be staged in the American League, Pittsburgh Soccer Club is due to meet the West Penn champions at Heidelberg and this will be the last session for the Green and Gold outfit before leaving for St. Louis to meet the all-star outfit selected from the Municipal League.

The Corinthians will meet Harmarville at Cooley field and this will probably be the last game for McKay's outfit this season. One game also will be staged in the International League, Braddock United meeting Douglas A. C. at Yost grounds.

Soccer is fast returning to normalcy in this district since the reorganization. President Fairfield talked the matter of the playing of the Ohio State game with Bill Angus prior to the Swissvale game last Sunday and there is a chance that this game might be postponed until the fall.

The elimination of Heidelberg from the national amateur tourney might not be such a calamity after all. Next Sunday the Green and Gold outfit will meet the cream of the St. Louis amateurs in the Mound City and reports coming from the Missouri city indicate that great interest is following the game.

Should Heidelberg succeed in winning this game it is an assured fact that the local champions, who, also were national champions last year, will represent the United States at the Olympic games.

This might not be done regarding the team as a whole, but it is quite possible that America's team will be built around the Western Pennsylvania champions. Pittsburghers are looking forward to a large crowd to attend next Sunday's game, for the gate will be split on a 50-50 basis, and our end will be devoted to the

LEWISTOWN FIVE LOSES, 35-31, IN TOURNEY FINAL

Coal Region Passers Gain Lead in First Period and Are Never Headed.

Losers Spurt and Tie Count In Third Quarter, But Weaken at Finish.

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., March 24.—Hazleton High School won the Pennsylvania state scholastic basketball title today, defeating Lewistown in the final, 35 to 31, after staving off a rally in the third period that threatened to turn the tide in favor of the westerners. Hazleton had a lead of 19 to 14 at the half and was in front all the way. Lewistown twice put up a great fight to get ahead, but only succeeded in making it even, once in the second period and once in the third.

The coal region boys seemed to have much better luck with their shots and played a superior game throughout, although the margin of victory was none too distinct. A final drive in the closing minutes of the fourth period gave the Mountaineers the victory after Lewistown had crawled up to within one point in a counter rally.

FORWARDS STAR

Capt. Watkins and Stecker, Hazleton's forwards, were the individual stars and chiefly responsible for the victory. Watkins made six field goals and one foul, while Stecker made five field goals and three fouls. Rupp and Capt. Weber, of Lewistown, were the bright spots in the losing team's play, the former scoring five field goals and two fouls, while his mate had four field goals and one foul. Clelan, star of the previous night's play, did not play up to the standard he set in the semi-finals, and made only one field goal. He played a good floor game, however, and got the tap consistently.

Hazleton flashed the same brilliant drive in the pinches that carried it to victory over Jersey Shore in the first round and always managed to keep slightly in the lead, although the margin was never more than six points.

The Mountaineers seemed to have enough in reserve in both games to clinch the game when it became necessary.

PLAY IS FAST

The game was exceptionally fast and hard-fought for high school play, and a considerable improvement over the form shown by either team in the first night's play. Lewistown seemed to be slightly rattled at times and overanxious to make a good impression before the large crowd. Only one substitution was made during the entire game, that for Hazleton when Hildebrand replaced O'Donnell, who went out on personal fouls.

Both teams were well supported by home-town delegations, Hazleton sending a band to reinforce the cheering section. The lineup:

Hazleton—35.		Lewistown—31.
Stecker	F	(C.) Weber
Watkins (C.)	F	Rupp
O'Donnell	C	Clelan
Weston	G	Brindel
MacCollum	G	Postel

WEST VIRGINIA WINS MEET—The rifle squads of Pitt, Carnegie Tech, West Virginia University, Penn State College, Pennsylvania and Drexel College competed in a sectional meet of a national competition over the Carnegie Tech range Saturday and the West Virginia team carried off first honors. Members of the teams are pictured above. Lippert is the prone tyro champion for 1928.

Mountaineers Win Sectional Collegiate Shoot Held Here

THE sharpshooters of West Virginia University won the Pennsylvania-West Virginia sectional shoot, sponsored by the National Rifle Association, at the Carnegie Tech range Saturday afternoon. Similar shoots were held in six other sections of the country Saturday, and if the Mountaineers' score is found to be higher than that of other sectional winners the West Virginians will be crowned national champions.

West Virginia's victory was fairly decisive, the winners piling up 1,396 targets as compared with the 1,280 of Penn State, in second place. The scores of other entrants, in the order of their finish, follow:

Carnegie Tech, 1,268; University of Pennsylvania, 1,261; University of Pittsburgh, 1,242; Drexel Institute, 1,237.

The teams were made up of five men each and the program called for competitions in prone, kneeling and standing positions, each contestant taking 10 shots from each position. Ten points were scored for a bullseye. DeJournett and Boone of West Virginia and Horner of Pitt were the high individual scorers.

The National Rifle Association awarded a bronze medal to each member of the winning team. The individual scores follow:

Penn State—Stearns, 270; Teskel, 248; Burrows, 263; Jeffman, 249; Fritz, 250.

Pitt—Horner, 272; Himberger, 234; McKinney, 272; Atkinson, 267; Millis, 259.

Drexel—Samwald, 216; Shute, 249; Yarnall, 252; Dobbs, 266; Rosenberg, 253.

day. The Missions are said to have figured that a contest today would have been a good boost for the games arranged for tomorrow, so they decided to play out all strings regarding a game for today. And now the Pirates, Seals and Missions are all worried about tomorrow. In forenoon the Buccos are set to play the Seals. This afternoon is set aside for the Missions. "Mulligan Day" is on the card for the afternoon frolic. But the weather forecast is not promising, and this, together with the condition of the grounds, makes the outlook very doubtful.

Bush is considering the advisability of sending some of his first string pitchers back to Paso Robles for further conditioning. Denie does not seem to be worrying about the other members of the club; he thinks the enforced idleness here may have a serious effect on the arms of the veterans who he will look forward to for championship pitching less than three weeks hence.

KREMER SLATED TO HURL

If the regular hurlers are ordered back to the training camp, Remy Kremer is not likely to be included. Kremer lives in Oakland and the Pirates are scheduled to play three games with the Coast League champions next week. Remy will work in at least one of these contests. His appearance on the mound is sure to draw many fans.

Fortunately all members of the club are enjoying good health. Manager Bush figures that in the event of good baseball weather during the Oakland series and in Los Angeles where the Pirates are slated to play four games with the Cubs, before leaving California, the team should be in fine form when the journey Eastward begins.

Games with the Oaks are slated for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. On the eve of the last engagements the Buccos will leave for Los Angeles. The series with the Cubs in the Southern city will start Thursday afternoon. Four contests are on the card for succeeding days. On top of the Sunday game the Pirates and Cubs will travel to Phoenix where they will stage a fifth battle for the edification of the fans of George Grantham's home town.

Today's cancellation was the third in a row in the San Francisco park.

Paddock Shatters Own Mark for 140

HOUSTON, Tex., March 24.—(AP.)—Charles Paddock, Los Angeles A. C. sprint star, sheared three-fifths second off his own world's record in the 140-yard dash here in the relay relays this afternoon when he set up a dazzling record time of 14 1-5 seconds.

Paddock breasted the tape barely three feet ahead of Fred Aldermann, national collegiate 120 and 220-yard champion. Aldermann, running for the Illinois A. C., led the California flash for 75 yards, but could not meet Paddock's brilliant burst of speed beyond the 100-yard mark.

ROD ELLSWORTH PICKS BUSCH TO WIN PYLE'S MARATHON RUN

By HARRY KECK,
Sun-Telegraph Sports Editor.

"BILL BUSCH is a sure bet to win if he gets any sort of a break."

That's the message that Rod V. Ellsworth of Monongahela brings back with him from C. C. Pyle's cross-country marathon race, out of which he was forced to drop after working his way up to fourth place during the 12 days he trekked with the troupe.

Ellsworth got back home last Thursday night and as soon as possible came to town to look up Busch's dad, Oscar Busch, and also get Bill's mother and gave them word of their son.

Ellsworth said the Millvale entry was running a heady race and keeping himself well under control. He was running his own race regardless of what the other contestants did, and figures to have plenty in reserve when the time comes to step out and fight for the lead.

"The only thing Bill needs is a little better care," Ellsworth declared. "The caravan has only one doctor and the runners who do not have their own trainers with them have to take care of themselves, and they generally are too tired to do that. A few more rubdowns wouldn't hurt Busch's chances a bit."

SHORT ON EATS

Ellsworth also said the runners do not get enough to eat while running. They are well fed when they reach the control station each evening, but get only a couple of sandwiches at noon and are almost famished before the end of the day's jog. This report jibes with a telegram the elder Busch received from Bill last week in which the runner asked that money be wired him immediately because he was "almost starved."

A cold in his knees which he contracted the second day out, while running through a steady rain, forced Ellsworth to abandon the race. He also suffered from shin splits, a twisting and inflammation of the ligaments of the shins which caused him terrific torture. He still limps from his stiffened knees. He plans to return to his job as lineman for the West Penn Power Company the first of April. He had obtained a three months' leave of absence to compete in the run. He lost only three pounds in the 12 days he ran and says he expects to recover entirely within a month and to suffer no permanent ill effects. He would like to try the run again, missing up rainy days and making up for such delays during the good weather. He dropped out at Slaterman, Ariz., after having covered 517 miles. At that time the field had been reduced from 241 starters to about 50.

According to Ellsworth, Willie Kolehmainen and Gunnar Nilsen, the two Finns who get the early race and were forced to quit after only a few days' running, started off with too much enthusiasm and were quick to realize their error. Newton, the South African, who led for days and then dropped out, was one of the favorites, but he, too, succumbed to the folly of setting the pace. He is 44 years old.

BUSCH NOT LOST IN DESERT

I asked Ellsworth about the story that Busch had become lost and suffered from delirium in the Mojave desert and he said there was no truth to the yarn.

"Bill and I became friends before the race and stuck closely together all the time I was in it," Rod said. "If he had been lost and led back to camp and worked on for hours by doctors, as reported, I would have known about it. All I can say is that he always traveled under his own momentum and at the control stations was one of the first in line when the call for supper sounded."

Regarding Earl Dilks, the New Castle runner who is doing so well in the race, Ellsworth said this contestant was complaining of blistered feet the last time he saw him, but was carrying manfully on.

The race already is from three to four days behind schedule, according to Ellsworth, due to the fact that some of the daily distances had to be cut down because the going was too tough. One day's route was cut from 51 to 31 miles and another day when the runners were scheduled to do 50 miles they covered only 32.

"Everybody knows Busch is in that race, and all of the survivors fear him," Ellsworth said. "They know he's made the trip before and they are realizing that his methodical gait is the one that is likely to last to the finish. The time they are making now means nothing. Busch is just jogging. Wait until he gets east of Chicago and the weather warms up, then watch him go. He'll be one of the few to get to New York, and he'll be first if not the only one. I promised to meet him there."

HAS INTERESTING HISTORY

Ellsworth is 28 years old and has been married six years and resides at 231 Vine street, Monongahela. He has been running since he was 11 years old, back in 1911, when he finished fourth in a field of 15 in a five-mile race on Schenley Oval. When he was 16 he ran in the Pittsburgh Leader's 55-mile race from New Castle to Pittsburgh and finished well up in the field. He broke into the running game through his brother, Frank, who was a champion runner at from 5 to 10 miles in those days. As part of his preparation for the Pyle run, Rod, last year, won the Philadelphia Company race of 16.1 miles from downtown to Schenley Oval in 1 hour 5 minutes 30 seconds, beating the runner-up by four minutes.

SOUMINEN RETAINS LEAD

THORSAU, New Mexico, March 24.—(AP.)—Arne Souminen, Finnish runner from Detroit, retained his lead in the Coast-to-Coast foot race today when the runners completed 741.6 miles of their 3,400-mile jaunt.

Although he finished fifth in today's 32.3-mile lap from Gallup, the Finn had a lead of nearly three hours in elapsed time over Andrew Payne of Claremore, Okla. Souminen's total time is 126:51:25.

Peter Gavuzzi of Southampton finished first in today's grind, covering the distance in 4:30:30. He was followed in order by Nestor Erickson, Rocheater, N. Y.; Andrew Payne and John Salo, Passaic, N. J.

Third Ranking Player Handed Surprise Defeat in Davis Cup Trials.

AUGUSTA, Ga., March 24.—(AP.)—Wilmer Allison, intercollegiate tennis champion, defeated George Lott, American ranking No. 3 player, 6-4, 1-6, 6-3, 3-6, 7-5, here today in an upset of the Davis Cup test play.

In the other singles match of the morning, Johnny Doeg, eighth ranking player, won from Wray Brown, St. Louis, 6-2, 6-3, 7-9, 8-6.

A light rain late in the day stopped play in the only doubles match after the first set, with Frank Shields, New York, and John Hennessey, Indianapolis, leading Doeg and Tamio Abe, Japanese player.

"The joining of forces between Fugazy and Mullen will apply to the selection of public choices for title fights in all boxing divisions.

HIT AT "MONOPOLY"

"Fugazy and Mullen have the following men under consideration for contenders for the heavyweight title:

"Paulino Uzcudun of Spain, Roberti of Italy, Von Porat of Norway, Emmanuel of San Francisco, Hansen of Wisconsin, George Godfrey of Chicago, Les Marriner of Chicago, Victorio Campolo of South America, Phil Scott of England, Jack Dorval of Pennsylvania and K. O. Kressner of Ohio.

"The present monopoly on the heavyweight situation has failed to produce legitimate contenders. It is believed that the present combination of Fugazy and Mullen will be the means of securing the real contender in the heavyweight division."

RICKARD'S HEAVIES BALK

NEW YORK, March 24.—(INS.)—Negotiations for a fight between Jack Sharkey and Jack Delaney on April 30, fell through at least temporarily this afternoon at a conference between the boxers' managers and Jess McMahon, Madison Square Garden matchmaker.

The trouble was over terms, Johnny Buckley, Sharkey's manager, demanding 30 per cent, and finally coming down to 27½ per cent, with McMahon holding out for 25 as a maximum. The ... finally eliminated this elimination contest for the time being.

Attempts to arrange a bout between Tom Heeney and Johnny Risko failed to progress because Heeney wants a direct shot at Gene Tunney and the title without ... intermediate battling.

Pittsburgh Gets Gigantic Sports, Social Center

GOLF and TENNIS by V. A. SWARTSFAGER

DESPITE the fact that the weather is breaking, and out-of-door golf will soon take our fancy, the inter-club indoor championship to be held in the East Liberty Indoor Golf Links, 611 Broad street, beginning Monday, should be a big event. All of the clubs which have not entered should get in touch with Press Anderson at Hazel 5489 and find out what it's all about. We anticipate an interesting tourney.

Peter O'Hara blew into town last week and is getting shipshape for the opening of the season at the Westmoreland Country Club. Golfer Hollander, of Westmoreland, informs us that Westmoreland members have been eagerly awaiting the coming of Pete. O'Hara is one of the finest instructors in the district.

The two lads Westmoreland sent from its caddie ranks to college are doing well, it is reported. Both boys were high in scholastic standing while in high school, and are keeping faith with Westmoreland by keeping up the good work in the higher institution of education. It's a wonderful thing.

Burke Glen is getting ready for the opening of its nine-hole links out on the William Penn Highway. A number of laborers are engaged in placing the layout in first class condition. This links, which was opened last August, is the only public course outside of the city. Jim Noble, who is in charge of things, is taking care everything will be ready for play when the time comes.

Interest is growing in anticipation of the golf show that is to appear here during the week of April 2. The only man who could play the star part as it should be played, according to Robert E. Harlow, Walter Hagen's manager, is Frank Craven—and Frank Craven it is who if the star and author of "The Nineteenth Hole," which opens at Harry Brown's Nixon on April 2. More golfers have seen this than any other show, 'tis said. Bobby Jones, Walter Hagen, Glenna Collett, Jess Sweetser, the Philadelphia and Boston Lesley Cup teams have seen it—and liked it.

Got a picture card from Frank Ninness, well-known Lions Club linksman, who is playing a lot of golf out in Reno, Nev. He also competes with the Hotel, Club and Restaurant Association during the summer.

Shannopin Country Club members are enthusiastic over the testimonial banquet to be given in honor of John J. Thompson, retiring president, Thursday night and have completed an interesting program. Speakers of prominence in the industrial and mercantile fields as well as other country club executives will be present. Entertainment is to be provided. The committee on attendance includes O. G. Butts, W. B. Thomas and N. G. Eyster.

Talking about Shannopin reminds us of the fact that we saw none other than the very affable Robert C. Muncaster of that club last week. And he's rushing around trying to get his business affairs straightened out so he can hit the links early—and strong—this summer.

The Hotel, Club and Restaurant Golf Association will hold a "one-night" tournament on the course of the East Liberty Indoor Golf Links, 6119 Broad street, on Thursday of this week, starting at 8:30 o'clock. Following the tournament, which is the club's second of the winter season, a dinner party will be held. President Jordan expects his club also will enter the inter-club championship.

And speaking of indoor courses, an inter-links match between the East Liberty and Downtown courses is planned. Eight-man teams likely will play. Monday eight men will play on the Downtown links in a small tourney; among them are several of the district's foremost amateur stars: Ray Babcock, Bob Munroe, Joe Crawford, Joe McCabe, Mork Hosenfeldt, Lang Hukill and Carl Schusler.

Y JUNIORS WIN

The Homewood-Brushton Y Juniors defeated the Carnegie Club of Braddock Saturday night, 40 to 16. The lineup:

H-B Juniors—40.		Carnegie—16.
Halfen	F.	Davis
Town	F.	Bache
German	C.	Halligan
Searight	G.	McGonigle
Taylor	G.	Cassidy

Field goals—Halfen 5, Town 6, German 2, Searight 3, Taylor 3, Davis, Bache, Halligan, McGonigle, Cassidy, Lintnose 2, McHugh 2, Kramer. Foul goals—Homewood-Brushton Y, 3 out of 3; Carnegie, 3 out of 4. Referee—Clinton.

ALLAND FIELD CLUB TO HAVE THREE LINKS

New Organization Has Facilities for All Athletics for 300 Members.

Country's Largest Swimming Pool, With Salt Water, Sand Beach, Is Feature.

By VERNON A. SWARTSFAGER.

PICTURE this: A country club with three 18-hole golf courses, the largest swimming pool in the country with salt water bathing, indoor and outdoor tennis, volleyball and baseball; football, soccer, lacrosse, ice skating, polo, squash racquets, billiards, pool, bowling, shooting, casting, gymnastic apparatus, cricket, croquet, quoits, basketball, field hockey, water polo and, last but not least, handball. A long, beautiful clubhouse covering six and eight-tenths acres of floor space under one roof settled snugly off a main highway with 700 acres of ground around it solidly given over to athletics. Facilities for every sort of social activity under the most desirable environment.

And if you can picture that, if you can conceive its magnitude, you will realize that Western Pennsylvania is about to have the largest athletic club in the country, if not in the world, before summer is well under way.

NEAR TO CITY

We have introduced to you the new Alland Field Club—the name of which is taken from the first three letters of Allegheny county and the last three letters of Westmoreland county, wherein it is situated. This gigantic project, which likely will be opened to its membership in July of this year, combines athletic and social activities for man, woman and child more than any other club ever organized.

Its coming will make Pittsburgh, or rather, the Pittsburgh district, for the Alland Field Club is situated 13 miles east of the city near Murrysville on the unparalleled William Penn Highway, where the well-known "House by the Side of the Road" now stands, one of the international sport centers of the world.

There is no room for skepticism in the Alland Field Club: it is an assured thing. It is not a fly-by-night promotion scheme—it is an organization of solid foundation that may revolutionize club life in time.

We often dream of the two-million dollar Olympia Fields in Chicago, with its many golf courses. Alland Field Club will have just as much.

We often dream of holding an international event in our own fair city—The Alland Field Club, with its 240-by-80-foot swimming pool, will be the only place in the country the Olympic 100-meter indoor championship can be raced!

There are so many, many wonderful things about this new club—so many things that would enrapture us in themselves—that it is hard to briefly give you an idea of the club you likely will learn to admire, and boast of, once it is opened and running on full program.

WONDERFUL SOCIAL ASPECT

Other than the many sport activities, there will be dancing, music, ultra-modern dining service, baths, a large children's nursery and playroom, reception and music rooms, a theater, library, sleeping rooms.

The large garage in itself will be ultra-modern. There will be no chance for theft, for only attendants will be permitted to take a car into the parking space (which is under the same roof with everything else) or out again. One stops at the entrance to the club—and his worries about parking are over.

While the membership will include 3,000 persons and their families, there will be ample accommodations so that there will be no inconvenience whatsoever even if the entire membership is in the clubhouse at the same moment.

LARGEST SWIMMING POOL

The swimming pool, to turn to the athletic end once again, will be more safe than any pool in this district. It will be filled with salt water. It will be electrically illuminated from under the water, which brings the danger of accidents down to a minimum. It will enhance the sensational developments of water polo, as well, for one will be able to see to the bottom of the pool easily. A long sand beach will be on either side of the pool. The pool will graduate from four feet to 16 feet in depth. Two steel floats will be in the pool when no athletic competition is scheduled, and in these the kiddies can splash around in water from six inches to two feet in comparative safety, with their parents or guardians standing in water up to their waists along side of them. This will be one of its most agreeable features, and is quite unique.

After all the pool will give the majority of wives and children who do not play at golf or another sport, a chance to enjoy themselves while daddy plays alinks, on the polo field, at baseball or whatever he is particularly fond of that does not permit of the gentler side of the family participating.

COULD SEAT CONVENTION

The swimming pool can be emptied of water, floored temporarily, and, with the seating capacity of three balconies on either side of it added, a national political convention could be held with ease and comfort.

The three balconies that overlook the pool, by the way, will serve to seat no less than 10,000 persons during a swimming meet, and we may rest assured that the Amateur Athletic Union will take advantage of it in holding its swimming championships.

The top balcony is curved and extended on each end, and, when cleared, provides a quarter mile running track. There is none better in any clubhouse in the country.

On the first floor, or running off of the swimming pool, to the left, from the north entrance, there will be a bathers' grill that will accommodate more than 500 persons at a time. And there will be no restrictions in this dining room; a bather may eat a lunch, partake of some sweets or order a full dinner while clad in wet garments if he so desires. Furthermore, there will be sufficient space for dancing. A dining balcony will be directly overhead.

RADIO COOKING PLANNED

The regular dining hall will be placed in a room of 180 by 80 feet, and will accommodate as many persons as wish to dine at the same time. It will adjoin the dining balcony. The cooking system will be an innovation in this district—a method that is little known in this country, although it has been flourishing in the old continent, will be a part of it. Radio cooking—or cooking by a diathermic process—means that the waitress will be

GIGANTIC ATHLETIC PLANT—Every branch of sportdom will have its sway according to its popularity in the Alland Field Club on the William Penn Highway which will open in July. Its large and beautiful clubhouse, architect's drawing of which is shown above, alone will cover three and a half acres under one roof, while the actual floor space will be about six and eight-tenths acres. It will be the central point around which virtually every indoor and outdoor sport will revolve. Three golf links, football, baseball, soccer, field hockey, tennis, basketball, volleyball, squash racquets, handball, bowling, bait and fly casting, revolver and rifle shooting, trapshooting, lacrosse, billiards, pool, gymnastic apparatus, water and field polo, croquet, quoits, horseback riding and the largest indoor swimming pool in the country are planned. The grounds cover 700 acres.

Compile Fine Record

UNDEFEATED—The girls' basketball team of Slippery Rock State Teachers' College at Slippery Rock, Pa., has gone through two seasons without a defeat. It has met and vanquished most of the other 12 teachers' college teams in the State, as well as many other prep school fives. Miss Dardis of Edgewood captained the quintet both years. The points scored in the two seasons totaled 501 against opponents' 152. Left to right in the group are: Back row—Elmira Compton, coach; Margaret Schilling, Ella Wilson, Elva McCausland and Caroline Meier. Middle row—Margaret Haven, Anne Cain, manager; Lois Ebert, Florence Winstone and Mildred Bruckheimer, coach. Front row—Ardis Manning, Sara Louden, Sara Dardis, captain; Helen Cooper and Mary Louden.

Week's Sport Review

they don't want any at all, and the action of the league or of the local owners in trying to make a one-horse town of Pittsburgh by transferring games to another city, where they could take in more money on account of having a larger rink, sickened them of the whole business.

It was outrageously unfair to patrons who have been paying their way, and sticking with the team through thick and thin, to consider a shift that would deprive them of the best attractions of the season.

The poorest hockey of the winter, played during the period when the Pirates went through 11 games without a victory, was evidently considered "good enough" for Pittsburghers. Nor was there any reduction in seat prices at the time.

But when the dessert was being served the promoters did not scruple to snatch the promised cake from Pittsburgh and give it to New York.

Like World Series Shift

"Get the money" has seemed to be the main plan, and Pittsburgh would be better off without a membership in such a league.

What if the baseball powers and the Pittsburgh management, after the Corsairs had won the National League pennant last year, had decided to play all of the world series games in New York, depriving Pittsburgh fans of a chance to see part of the classic?

That would have been called the sport crime of the century, yet it would have been no worse in principle than the action of the local and league hockey bosses last week in agreeing to have all the play-off games staged in New York in event of Odie Cleghorn's boys winning third place.

The arrangement agreed upon might also well be termed grossly unfair even to the local hockey magnates' own players, for the Pirates deserved a lot of credit for the fight they made after an awful start, and the agreement to make them play both of their games with the Rangers on the latter's own ice, with the games against Boston to take place there as well, instead of giving Cleghorn's colts the privilege to which they were entitled of playing part of the series in their home rink and before friendly fans, was utterly devoid of sportsmanship or common justice.

ANZAC STARS

FROM what he has shown to date, Tom Heeney, the Australian heavyweight, does not appear to have anything like the amount of fistic stuff required to win the championship from a ring workman of the class of Gene Tunney, but if precedent had anything to do with it, Heeney might be expected to get somewhere.

For, regardless of what may be said of this particular individual, it cannot be denied that Australia has turned out a remarkable number of really great fighters. Not all of them were born there, but they were developed in the "down under" country.

There was Peter Jackson, for instance. From 1882 to 1892, six years before he made a pitiable attempt to come back and was crushed by Jim Jefferies in three rounds, he was one of the greatest heavyweights of all time, not excluding Sullivan, Dempsey, Johnson or Jefferies.

Holds Three Titles

There was also Bob Fitzsimmons, pound for pound the greatest fighting machine, in the opinion of many, that the world has ever known. Fitz held three world championships. He was still middleweight champion and could make the poundage when he won the heavyweight title from Corbett, and after Jefferies had snatched the heavywieght crown from him and the light-heavyweight class was created Ruby Robert stepped in and won the honors from George Gardner.

Another notable Australian product was Young Griffo, admittedly the cleverest boxer that ever put up his hands.

Joe Goddard, the barrier champion, was one more Australian star, and the four named form only a suggestion of the army of ring battlers they produced in the Antipodes.

There might be mentioned also Billy Murphy, 118 pounds, who was the first to defeat the great Ike Weir, the Belfast Spider, winning the featherweight championship; Frank Slavin, a topnotcher for years; Jim Hall, a clever middleweight, who spent considerable time around the Pittsburgh district three decades ago; Dan Creedon, Billy McCarthy, Jim Ryan, Billy Smith, Jack Slavin, Paddy Gorman, Steve O'Donnell and George Mulholland, all of about the same poundage as Hall; Tom Tracy and George Dawson, welterweights of uncommon ability; Abe Willis, who fought George Dixon for the featherweight title; Hugh Napier, George McKenzie, Jim Barron and others.

Darcy's Fatal Trip

Even in later days Australia continued to develop fighters in the various classes, such as Hugh Mehegan, Dave Smith, Hock Kayes, Frank Thorn, Colin Bell, Jack Green and Arthur Cripps.

The star of the modern lot was the late Les Darcy. In his home country, Darcy had shown every sign of being a world-beating middleweight and probably would have beaten most of the heavyweights as well.

But his trip to America was a fatal one, and after he had been refused permission to box in several places here after the Governor of New York had taken the first stand on the charge that Darcy was a slacker, the fighter died of what was really a broken heart in Memphis on May 24, 1917.

Darcy at his best could have licked all the heavyweights in Rickard's recent elimination tourneys, one after another.

RECORDS SET IN NET PLAY

Mrs. Wightman Wins 28th National Title — Helps Make Girl, 14, Champion

BROOKLINE, Mass., March 24.—(AP.)—Records for youth, consistency and speed were shattered here today as champions were crowned in the women's national indoor singles and doubles tennis tournaments and indoor mixed doubles play on the covered courts of the Longwood Cricket Club.

The distinction of being the youngest player ever to win a national title went to little 14-year-old Sarah Palfrey of Brookline when she teamed with Mrs. George W. Wightman, her fellow townswoman, to win thhe doubles title in straight sets from Mrs. W. M. Shedden of Chestnut Hill and Mrs. J. L. Bremer of Boston.

The scores were 6-1, 6-0, and the match took just 23 minutes to play, thereby creating a speed record for national title finals play which Mrs. Wightman believed unsurpassed. The victory gave Mrs. Wightman her twenty-seventh national title since she took up the game.

PASSES UP SINGLES

With "five minutes to get my breath," the Brookline veteran returned to the courts to capture her twenty-eighth title in the mixed doubles final. Teaming with Henry L. Johnson, Jr., of Waban, she won from Mrs. Charles J. Hubbard, Sr., of Cambridge and Henry R. Guild of Longwood in another straight-set match, 6-3, 6-1.

Mrs. Wightman's performance today gives her a grand total of 11 "mixed" titles on grass, dirt and boards to add to her nine doubles and six singles crowns. Whether she could have won the singles title today was a matter of conjecture, but her decision not to enter the singles tournament left Miss Edith Sigourney of Boston and Mrs. Hubbard to face each other as finalists.

After a slow start against brilliant, although somewhat erratic tennis on the part of her opponent, Miss Sigourney settled down to outsteady the Cambridge woman and take the title by the scores of 4-6, 6-3, 6-1.

Chartiers Heights Signs Zimmerman

It was officially announced by officials of the Chartiers Heights Country Club Saturday that Dale Zimmerman had signed a contract as professional for the club for the present season.

Zimmerman, brother of Nelson Zimmerman, former professional at the Westmoreland Country Club, recently obtained his release as professional from the newly-formed Valley Heights Club at Oakmont.

NEW SWIM MARK SET

CHICAGO, March 24.—(AP.)—A new world's indoor scholastic record for the 100-yard backstroke was set today at Northwestern University's indoor track and swimming tournament. Sela of Akron High School won the event, his time being 1 minute and 6.3 seconds.

BOWLING and BILLIARDS

THE time for making entries for the American Duckpin Congress tournament, April 9 to 21, has been extended one week. Instead of closing at midnight Saturday, the tournament committee has decided to accept entries until midnight of next Saturday.

The reason for this action is to be found in the unprecedented demand of the bowlers of Pittsburgh and vicinity for more time to arrange to compete under the new A. D. C. classification plan which, for the first time in tournament bowling, gives the average roller an equal chance with the expert to get into the money.

The A. D. C.'s program was announced such a short time ago that the bowlers did not have time to catch on to the new idea. The vast majority of the 70,000 duckpin rollers in this section never before have considered entering a tournament that promises to be as fast as this one, because they knew down in their hearts that they didn't have a chance for their money—that it would be whacked up among the "sharks" and all they'd get would be the exercise.

But the new A. D. C. plan, modeled on the Lewis Class system which governs prize money distribution in trapshooting, and makes four equal classes of the competitors, arranged according to the scores they roll in competition, leaves the high average bowlers to fight it out for the Class A prize money at the top of the heap, but gives the bowlers whose scores automatically place them in Classes B, C, and D., their own pools to compete for. This insures a fair distribution of prize money all along the line and gives bowlers who wouldn't have a chance under the antiquated system of the past, an opportunity to pull down a share of the spoils.

This is the reason for setting back the date of closing the entries; so many bowlers have asked for more time to get into the rolling under this unique plan that the tournament committee decided to grant their request rather than shut out anyone who wants to get a crack at it for lack of time to prepare.

Late yesterday afternoon, Tournament Manager Hilary E. Wertz, after checking over the entries already received and those in the hands of other committee members and agents, announced that the goal of 500 five-man teams had been reached and possibly passed. This means the biggest event in the history of Western Pennsylvania duckpins, and a prize list of more than $10,000 to be shot for when the rolling starts on the Haus alleys, April 9. Entries should be addressed to the Tournament Committee, American Duckpin Congress, 923 Fulton Building.

BIG TOURNEY ENTRY

The open duckpin tourney to be held at the Market Square Recreation, 409 Market street, the first two weeks in April, is attracting entries from all over the Tri-state district, the home of the small pin bowling game, and it is predicted by the management that before the entries close every section in which the small ball game is played will be represented. The tourney is under the direction of the East Liberty Bowling Association, Inc., and is the fifth annual bowling classic sponsored by this association.

A guaranteed prize list just announced will pay the winner of the five-men event $250, with $150 to the second-place team, while third place will be good for $100. There will be 17 other cash prizes in the five-men event and 20 cash prizes in both the doubles and singles. A top prize of $100 will go to the winners of the doubles, while high score in the singles will net the winner $75. There will be three prizes for those finishing high in all-events and other special prizes giving all a chance to share in the estimated prize award of $2,500.

Events for women will prove a prominent feature of the tourney and it is believed the record entry of 28 five-women teams established in 1925 will be surpassed.

The tourney alleys being new and centrally located in the heart of the downtown business district will provide an ideal setting for the matches. Automatic pin-spotters will provide the accurate spotting so essential to a successful tourney.

Out-of-town teams will be given preference as to bowling dates and teams wishing special dates should get their entries in early.

The entry fee for men is $2 for each event and for women $1. This fee includes the cost of bowling. Further information may be had by addressing the East Liberty Bowling Association, Inc., care Market Square Recreation, 409 Market street, or by calling Court 9191.

HEARST RIFLE SHOOT RETURNS CLOSE APRIL 16

Large Number of Schools Rush Their Scores to Official Headquarters.

Entry List Is Largest Ever Compiled for International Competition.

WITH April 15 as the "dead line," returns from the 389 R. O. T. C. teams entered in the national competition for the William Randolph Hearst rifle trophies are arriving in large numbers at the headquarters of Col. George McD. Weeks, Sixth Army Corps Headquarters, Chicago, who is official referee.

Among the first to send their results of the shoot were the University of Arizona, Louisiana State University, Knox College, Staunton Military Academy, Howe School, Walla Walla High School, Louisvale Male High School and the Virginia Agricultural Institute.

The firing, which is being completed in all the competing schools under the supervision of Regular Army instructors, is said to be unusually accurate this year.

The entry list this year is greater than ever before in history. A total of 237 institutions are represented in the competition, which distinguishes the matches as the greatest national event ever conducted among educational institutions in this country.

A tremendous amount of interest was added to the competition as the result of the sectional trophies which are now awarded in addition to the national trophy.

It is not believed that the results will be announced by the War Department until May 1, owing to the thoroughness with which the actual targets are checked and marks submitted by each individual school verified.

Waltons to Hold Casting Tourney

The Pittsburgh Casting Club of the Izaak Walton League will hold its second indoor tournament in the pool of the East Liberty Y. M. C. A. next Wednesday night. Accuracy events in the ½-ounce and ⅝-ounce will be held.

New Track Records Expected In Tri-State College Meets

By JESS CARVER.

ALTHOUGH Jock Sutherland and his Pitt Panthers will make a second attempt to get started on their spring football practice, and the collegians generally will confine their around-the-stove discussions to Walter Okeson and his new $10,000 per year football job, the main collegiate sport activity of the next two months will center about the track and field.

It is not unreasonable to predict that eight of the fifteen standing college track and field records in the tri-state district will be shattered during the coming cinder season. Three or four of 'em are almost certain to be cracked wide open. The rest are in the doubtful class.

Those records that stand a good chance of remaining as is for another season are the 100 yard mark, held by Bill Butler of Geneva; held by Bill Butler, of Geneva; Jerry Allen's 880; Elser Hay's mile; Teddy Corbett's 2-mile; Ed Sheehan's broad jump, and Bill Robusch's high jump marks. The only of these that is likely to fall is Butler's century record of 9 4-5, which might be shattered by Pete Bowen of Pitt and possibly by Ken Webecan, another Panther star.

The records that seem destined to fall are Kelley's 220; Robertson's 120 yard high hurdles; Guy Halferty's 220 yard low hurdles; Bob Davis' shot put; Gibby Welch's discus; Don Gwynn's hammer; Vic Pickard's pole vault records and Gib Welch's Javelin.

Of the latter, Gibby Welch stands a chance of shattering no less than three, the Javelin, discus and shot put. Pickard may break his own pole vault record and Don Gwynn will likely better his hammer tossing distance. Knoblock, Pitt sophomore hurdler, will set his cap for both the hurdle marks and Pete Bowen, Virgil Elliott, of Bethany, and Webecan, of Pitt, will lead the raids on the furlong record.

The leading local track events of the year will be the Big Four meet at the stadium; the Pitt Tech and Pitt-West Virginia dual engagements and the conference meet and any dual meets in which either Pitt, Bethany or Geneva happen to be entered.

DR. SUTHERLAND and his aides are praying for good weather tomorrow and for the next two or three weeks for the Pitt spring football sessions. The task ahead of the Panther mentor is a tremendous one, with seven or eight varsity positions to be filled with new men and with just a fair assortment of material with which to work.

Pitt will be fortunate in one respect. It seems that there are half a dozen or so football players of ability who were ineligible last season for varsity competition for one reason or another, who are in school at the present time and will be out for the Panther team next fall, and will take part in the spring drills. Jim Rooney, DeMoita and Barnes are among those gentry. It is not likely that Coach Sutherland will be peeved over having any of these boys back.

PALMER PLANS RELAYS

CAPT. WILLIAM A. PALMER, of Shady Side Academy, has completed his plans for the first annual Shady Side Interscholastic and Preparatory School Relays, which will be staged on the Shady Side athletic field May 19.

A feature of this meet, which looms as one of the principal scholastic track and field events of the year, will be the invitation mile relay, in which teams from Nichols School, of Buffalo; University School, of Cleveland; Arnold School, of Pittsburgh; Lindsey Institute, of Wheeling, W. Va., and the La Salle Institute, of Maryland, will compete.

Capt. Palmer has a program consisting of 15 events, including, in addition to the special invitation preparatory school relay, a spring medley relay and a special one-mile relay championship for city high schools.

GENEVA UNDECIDED

GENEVA COLLEGE has about decided to retain Mac Flenniken and Merle Schachern, stars of last fall's champion Covenanter eleven, as varsity coaches to succeed Col. Alvin (Bo) McMillin, now receiving his mail out in Kansas, where he is coaching the Kansas Aggies.

A meeting of the Board of Trustees will be held Tuesday night, at which time the board will pass on Flenniken and Schachern.

The announcement of the plan on the part of Geneva was carried exclusively in The Sun-Tele last week and was confirmed by Graduate Manager of Athletics Edgecomb, of Geneva, Friday.

IN CASE Flenniken and Schachern do not meet with the approval of the board, it is understood that two other men will receive consideration for the position left vacant by McMillin. One of these is Pete MacCrae, former Syracuse University all-American end. The other is a westerner, an Indian and former grid star.

Duquesne's Fall Marks End of School Cage Season

The Great Outdoors
By Gib Marsh

Gib Marsh.

AT a recent bench show I watched a large fine looking dog, a breed included in the working dog group, being led into the ring. Suddenly it crumpled on the floor, twisted its body and whined with pain. Of course there was much excitement about the ring and some of the spectators really started for the exits, but halted when the handler, thoroughly experienced, tightened the collar and choked it into submission and dragged it as gently as possible out of the ring. Twenty minutes later the handler led the dog back into the ring, and while it was a trifle weak it possessed the quality and class to win over the field and was awarded the ribbon.

But during the 20 minutes the handler and ministering to the dog I listened to the discussions offered by the ringsiders. Of course the real dog fanciers knew the real trouble and cause for the spasm. But those unfamiliar with dogs contended the dog was dangerously mad and some even ventured it had the rabies. Now there was nothing seriously wrong other than the dog was suffering from worms. It had been on exhibition for a number of weeks and its handler did not have an opportunity to remove from its intestines those pain dealing pests.

AT the close of the show the dog was removed to a local kennel, properly ministered to and when the worms were forced from its abdomen the dog was normal again and acted as if overjoyed with its handler. Now that the spring season is at hand all dogs should be put through the worming treatment. Hunting dogs as well as bench dogs should be ministered to for those small intestinal parasites. Even dogs running at large on farms should be included for it is certain that after the heavy feeding during the winter some worms accumulate, causing intense suffering and eventually spasms, or other forms of fits. The treatment is simple and in 24 or 48 hours the worms can be destroyed and the dog will enjoy good health during the summer months and its general conduct will contribute pleasure to its owner.

Not to minister to a dog for worms at this season of the year or any time is careless almost to a degree of cruelty. There is no reason for becoming alarmed when a dog is seized with a spasm, as many of the spectators did at the bench show I referred to.

Suffering from intense pain the dog may close its teeth on the handler, but the bite is seldom serious. And so far as those spectators claiming that dog was suffering from the rabies it was absurd.

Last week I listened to a discussion among a group of trapshooters in reference to the common faults experienced in the sport and it finally concluded that the tendency to raise the cheek from the stock when pulling the trigger or pulling the head away from the stock was responsible for the majority of missed targets. The cause for this is chiefly the failure of the gunner to concentrate, unless the shooter is suffering from a spell of flinching and is pulling his head from the stock on each shot. When the shooter is in a spell of flinching the best remedy is to put up his gun and discontinue shooting for a couple of weeks or a month.

But raising the head is not the only fault. Another common fault is the tendency to guide or point the gun with the arm extended on the barrel, instead of directing the barrel with the hand gripping the stock. This fault is easy to acquire and difficult for the gunner to realize. Usually it will be first observed by some experienced gunner watching the squad. Another common fault is failing to continue the swing of the gun on angle targets.

WHEN the gunner notices he is missing consistently angle targets he can assure himself he is stopping the swing of the gun when firing. But the stars of the game will tell you there are a score of faults resulting from the lack of concentration. Good physical condition is necessary. I have observed the cracks of this country make stupid shots, really miss easy shots in each event, due to their sluggish condition on that day.

At the national championships at Chicago in 1921 I saw the late Fred Gilbert, of Iowa, one of the crack professionals of the year, crack on the easiest brand of a target in a shoot-off and losing the national 18-yard title. He raised his head off the stock. But that was the only time that week he committed that error. He kept his mind on his work after that costly miss.

As a result of dining heavily the night previous, or at least that was the excuse he offered, I saw Lester German, of Maryland, at the national at Cleveland in 1920, drop 26 out of 200 targets. The week previous he broke 541 targets out of 550. That year he had 41 runs of 50 and better, 19 of which were 100 and better. So it is not advisable to eat heavily before going into a clay target contest.

In spite of their long years in competition I have seen Mark Arie, of Illinois, probably the greatest of our champions, and Bart Lewis, of the same state, winner of many amateur and professional titles, raise their heads and miss targets. Of course they got down to business on the next shot.

Pulling the head away from the stock or raising the head off the comb is responsible for the majority of miss targets, which is due to the lack of concentration. However, the habit of tending to guide the gun with the hand extended on the barrel is common, but difficult to realize.

Tut Breaks Hands, But Beats Snell

SAN FRANCISCO, March 24.—(AP.) King Tut, Minneapolis, lightweight boxer, broke several bones in each hand in his eight round bout here last night with Doc Snell of Tacoma, it was revealed today when Tut applied at Central Emergency Hospital for treatment. Tut won the bout by a decision.

SCHOLASTIC SPORT TURNS TO OUTDOORS

Track and Baseball to Take Attention of High School Lads With Spring.

Defeat of Henry's Five at State College Comes Only After Remarkable Record.

By VERNON A. SWARTSPAGER

THE basketball season has ended — and a fine one it was. Now we look to track and baseball, although more to track, for there appears to be much more interest in scholastic track competition than in baseball. Possibly a number of the schools think baseball is too expensive a proposition.

The climax of the basketball season was reached last Friday night when Duquesne opened its fight for the state championship at Penn State College—and was duly beaten. That was tough luck, for Roy Henry had a mighty fine team and, we believe, every bit as good as any other quint in the state. One must take into consideration the fact that Duquesne was just about due for a "blow" after all. Its exceptionally fine work in running through to the top rung in the regular W. P. I. A. L. play, and in the W. P. I. A. L. championship series at the Pitt Stadium, and in the Western Pennsylvania title game against Sharon at Grove City by far outweighs its slump against Lewistown at State College last Friday night. Every team goes stale in time, and that, possibly, might be used as a most plausible alibi—and we don't think Duquesne needs one.

The most hectic season in many a year was played in the City Senior League, Allegheny High School finally came across with the best team after Fifth Avenue and South Hills had made strong bids. Schenley, champion for several seasons, flopped.

And so we look forward to out-of-door sports in keeping with the season of spring.

There was another quint up in New Castle outside of the High School five that turned out a good record in basketball. It was the New Castle Trade School. During its first year on the floor under the direction of Le Roi Norton, it won 11 and dropped only one contest. It lost to Zelienople of W. P. I. A. L. fame, in the early part of the season, but wound up by a 21-19 victory over the same outfit in its closing game. Bill Johns and Capt. Henry were its high scorers. Johns tallied 117 points. The other members of the team, Tom Jinkins, Irvin Stewart, Walter Shook and Baldy Watson also played well. The men playing on the reserve team were Leo Marischer, Hahn, Owens, Waggoner and Leonard Marischer. James Lewis was the team manager.

The Trade School's record follows: Zelienople 30, Trade School 27; Trade School 43, Union 8; Trade School 24, Senior B 9; Trade School 53, Sophomores 14; Trade School 39, Junior A 21; Trade School 25, Bessemer 14; Trade School 30, Union 10; Trade School 50, Business College 5; Trade School 31, Junior B 17; Trade School 27, Senior A 25; Trade School 26, Butler 21; Trade School 21, Zelienople 19.

PINKEY TO BOX EVANS

YOUNGSTOWN, O., March 24.—Pinky Mitchell of Milwaukee and Dick Evans, local middleweight, were signed today for a 10-round bout here next Thursday night. They will take the place of the Emmet Rocco-Young Scarney match which has been postponed two weeks, due to an attack of tonsilitis which Rocco suffered while training. Mitchell's clash with Evans will mark his debut as a full-fledged middleweight.

fied with the results he was getting on the mound.

The third-string catching job on the Pittsburgh club is not solved by any means. Donie Bush likes the actions of Ralston Hemsley, but the Ohio coal miner may not be ready for big league duty. The club is in need of a right-hand batter for this post, and while Ralston hit well in the minors he has been unable to show much with the stick in the spring training period. True, he has not been up at the plate much. Nevertheless, there seems to be a little doubt in this direction.

Bill Haeffner also is a classy receiver who has not started to hit. But Haeffner, like Hemsley, has had scant opportunity at the plate. Pete Scott, the other candidate for the job, is a more powerful batter than either, but Pete is not wild about receiving duty. So you can realize that all is not so well as regards this assignment.

If Gooch or Smith work in the lineup when the left-handers unlimber against the Buccos, the team often may be a reminder of the Pirates on the day that Herb Pennock made them look like twilight leaguers.

DuBois Five Beats Local Railroaders

DUBOIS, Pa., March 24.—DuBois Car Shops won a hard-fought game from the Pittsburgh B. & O. team here tonight, 30 to 22. The locals led throughout, topping a 20-11 count at half time. In the final periods the visitors came back strong, but the playing of A. Rokoski of the DuBois five was too much for the B. & O. quintet. Klosky was a star for the losers. The summary:

Marathon Swim To Be Pro Event

The proposed Marathon swim to be staged by Johnny Jones during the coming summer will be strictly a professional affair, according to the promoter. Jones originally had intended to stage an open event, but later developments caused him to change his plans.

The swim will be from Lock No. 2 in the Monongahela River at Braddock to Lock No. 1, at South Seventeenth street, the winner to receive a handsome silver trophy and cash prize, with second and third place winners also drawing down cash.

St. Michael's defeated St. Francis of Loretto, 18 to 15, this afternoon, while Duquesne downed Johnstown 23 to 9, tonight.

In the first game today, Duquesne defeated Clearfield High, 36 to 14.

Lilly High School won the Public High School tournament title award class B teams of the district by St. Francis College. The Lilly team defeated Gallitzin in the final, 28 to 16. In the semi-finals this afternoon, Lilly defeated Nant-y-Glo 23 to 12, and Gallitzin won, 22 to 21, from Beaver ale.

CLEANUP FOR DETROIT

EVANSTON, Ill., March 24.—(AP.)—Detroit school boy athletes made Northwestern University's sixteenth annual interscholastic track and swimming championships virtually a home-town affair today with Northeastern High School winning the track title and Highland Park High taking the swimming meet.

SANDLOT BASEBALL
by TOM BIRKS

STEPPING out at a snappy pace, the sandlot situation become more clarified during the week when practically every league in the district finished its organization plans for the season, and now in most of the circuits the only matter to be cleared up is the rules and schedule committees' report for the opening games.

Nothing further has developed in the status of the Allegheny County League, and unless something is sprung during the week it is very evident that the leading circuit of the district will be a four-club affair.

A sensation was sprung Thursday when an announcement was made that a break had been made in the ranks of the Pittsburgh Umpires' Association, and that the leading members of the organization, including all of its officers, had left the organization and started a new outfit and named it the Western Pennsylvania Baseball Umpires' Association.

This news, while coming like a thunderbolt, was not unexpected. This trouble was narrowly averted last season, and men connected with official baseball in the capacity of attending games heard rumblings that sooner or later would create an open break.

Just what will happen now remains to be seen, with two organizations attending league meetings and bartering for games anything is likely to happen. The managers themselves who pay the price will hardly be concerned whether there is two or 22 associations in the district. They will demand the best men they can get for the money they are willing to spend.

The new organization will have a meeting Wednesday and then it is possible that officers will be elected and a start made for the coming season.

GOEHRING HEARD FROM

Bill Goehring, the old West Newton mentor, kicks in with a little note, and any communication from Bill is always welcome. Goehring knows independent baseball as good as any man in the district and states that 10 of his last year's team are now in the minors. Lew Phillips, one of the best outfielders up the Yough Valley, is supposed to be dickering with Charleroi and the boy with a powerful arm might land in the Middle Atlantic. Rip Rush and Bill Weiland are going to the Monongahela River town.

Homestead Aces are back on the diamond this season with the additional help of Jack Fertig. Jack is an old-timer in Homestead sandlot affairs and together with Tommy Martin expects to have a banner season.

The club is going to play league ball again, and will book a large number of independent games.

Tommy Martin and Fertig always manage to have a winning aggregation and have produced some of the best sandlot stars in the district. For games write Box 112, R. F. D. No. 1, Duquesne Road, Homestead, Pa.

BRUSHTON

The Homewood-Brushton Booster organization will put on an old-fashioned dance and bingo party for the followers of the club and their friends at Bryn Mawr Hall, April 18.

The Scott Morgan, Jack Herron, Harry Neaman committee has things whipped into shape for the affair, and it should bring a little more grist into the County League Club's treasury. Manager Hank Daly is now convalescing from a recent operation and things are beginning to take good shape.

The City League looks like the to date. Secretary Sweeney announces the most advanced loop in the district nounces that a schedule and rules meeting will be held on Wednesday evening and all clubs should be on hand. Eight well balanced clubs, St. Johns, Reliance Life, Pleasant Valley, Civics, Book Shoe, Hermes-Grove, J. L. Thomas and Stowe comprise one of the best loops ever organized in this district. The forfeits in this loop must be posted not later than Monday night.

NEW TEAM FORMED

A new baseball organization has been formed down in McKees Rocks. It will be called the W. O. W. aggregation and its management claim to be able to place a first-class outfit on the diamond to represent the Rox.

Joe Roscoe will manage the outfit which has already entered the Greater Pittsburgh League. Games will be played on Harlem field.

Teams wishing to book the W. O. W. should write Joseph Roscoe, 221 Churchill street, McKees Rocks, or call Federal 1939-J.

The Beaver County League will start off with eight clubs on its roster this season. Ellwood City, Beaver Falls, New Brighton, Rochester, Freedom, Beaver, Baden and Monaca are in the field.

M. R. Glover, of Beaver Falls, will be president; Ralph Bennett, of New Brighton, vice president, and Charles E. Morrison, of New Brighton, secretary.

Sandlot baseball around Butler county is booming already and there is considerable talk of placing a team in the Allegheny-Kiski Valley League, and the Butler County League last season composed of 14 clubs will again operate.

The Hemlock All-Stars will be back again this season. A meeting was held on Thursday evening and all the season's preliminary business transacted.

JACK HIGGINS WINS DERBY

NEW ORLEANS, March 24.—(AP.)—Jack Higgins, owned by W. Curran, won the seventh renewal of the Louisiana Derby here today. Beauregard was second and Time Maker, the favorite, third, and Galahad finished fourth.

Jack Higgins, ridden by Jockey C. E. Allen, was a length and a half ahead of Beauregard at the finish. Time Maker, the heavily backed favorite, was three lengths behind Beaurefard.

The time for the mile and one-eighth was 1:52.

Jack Higgins rewarded his backers by paying $46.40 on each $2 mutual ticket.

HOPPE BEATS ALLEN

NEW YORK, March 24.—(AP.)—Willie Hoppe, winner of the American League three-cushion billiard tournament, vanquished Allen Hall of St. Louis in an exhibition three-cushion match of 12 blocks here, 600 to 429. The match, which had been in progress all week, ended tonight with Hoppe scoring a high run of 13 to take the final block, 50 to 39, in 31 innings.

HOCKEY

found the Pirates playing a purely defensive game, and they did such a neat job of turning the New Yorkers back that the visitors never were able to seriously threaten.

Reserves stole the spotlight from the stars in the first period by scoring four of the five goals recorded. After the Pirates, forcing the play, had bombarded Goalie Chabot without mercy for five minutes, Bert McCaffrey, spare wingman, finally broke through and registered on an unassisted effort. After about 12 minutes had elapsed, a Mr. Thompson, almost unknown, stepped into the picture with a bang and registered two goals in as many minutes. His first tally was clubbed in on Gray's rebound, but neat stick handling and skating enabled him to repeat without any assistance.

MILKS LEADS SCORERS

Hardly had the groaning and soulful sighs died down when McCaffrey returned to the rescue of the Pirate cause and drew thunderous applause by taking a pass from White near the boards and slamming home a hot one from an almost impossible angle. His wallop easily was the best of the night.

About a minute before the gong, Hib Milks solidified his position as the Pirates' leading scorer by skating through the entire Ranger team and registering an unassisted goal that put the locals out in front, and, after 11 minutes of play in the second canto, he ended the argument and the scoring by duplicating his one-man scoring feat.

The precision and power of the Pirate attack in the first two periods, when they were really attacking, indicated that the Rangers are going to have plenty of trouble advancing beyond the first round in the play-off series. Although they played as if a championship were at stake, the Gothamites had none the better of the argument in the first period, and the second period was a Pittsburgh chapter all the way. In the third, when "stalling" was the business at hand, the defense was called upon to shoulder the burden, and the play of Burke, McKinnon and Smith left nothing to be desired.

MEET AGAIN IN PLAYOFF

Because the attendance here has not been big enough to satisfy the league officials, the first game of the Pirates-Ranger play-off series will be played in New York Tuesday night. This is to be Pittsburgh's "home" game, and the Rangers will meet the Bucs on the same ice in their "home" fracas Thursday night. The lineup:

New York—2.		Pittsburgh—4.
Chabot	G	Worters
Johnson	D	Burke
Abel	D	McKinnon
W. Cook	W	Darragh
F. Cook	W	Cotton
Boucher	C	Milks

Score by periods:

New York	2	0	0—2
Pittsburgh	3	1	0—4

Second period summary—Scoring, Milks, unassisted, 7:03. Penalties—none.

DEMANDS FOR GLASS STOCKS IMPROVE HERE

Steady Tone for Manufacturing Issues and Revival of Interest in Fuel Shares.

Improved demand for some of the glass stocks, a steady tone in the miscellaneous manufacturing issues and a slight revival of interest in the fuel shares marked the week's dealings on the Pittsburgh Stock Exchange.

Widest advance of the period was in Pittsburgh Plate Glass which moved up several points on buying based on expectations of resumption of extra dividends on the issue late this year. The company is now paying the usual $8 annual rate, having suspended payment of the customary semi-annual distribution of $5 a share extra last year. Improvement in the industry and strong demand for non-shatter glass for automobiles, a field the company entered recently in connection with the du Pont interests, are the principal factors behind the present buying and are the base of the hope that extra dividends will be resumed in the not distant future.

Other glass stocks were moderately active, but price ranges were relatively narrow. American Window Glass Company preferred was handled during the week at a fraction under 90. This company is one of the leading manufacturers of window glass with a 20-year dividend record for the senior stock, a 7 per cent cumulative issue. All of the common is owned by the American Window Glass Machine Company, the royalty concern under whose patents it operates.

FUEL DISAPPOINTING

The arrow changes in the fuel stocks were somewhat disappointing to the traders who have been expecting these issues to follow the lead of the oil and gas shares in New York. Oil stocks on the "big board" have been in better demand this week than for some time and there have been one or two notable movements in the group. Principal activity has been in Sinclair Oil, which sold at the highest since 1923 on a movement, more or less mysterious, but thought to be in connection with possible merger developments. Phillips Petroleum was one company mentioned a possibly being involved, but as Standard of Indiana is understood to have large interests in Sinclair, it was not exactly clear how Phillips would fit into the situation. For this reason, the trading community was not inclined to give much credence to the report.

Gulf Oil, one of the greatest of the oil companies, a Pittsburgh founded and Pittsburgh managed concern, noted some signs of approaching improvement in the industry in its report issued during the week and supplied a measure of encouragement to the oil share traders whose patience long since gave way to a spirit of dogged determination to "hang on" for the inevitable betterment in the industry they favor. Reports from the big producing areas in the West were somewhat more favorable and as the various bits of news trickled through the financial channels there was an evident disposition on the part of the traders to take on more stocks while speculative buying of a rather cautious fashion also made its appearance.

METALS SHARES BULGE

The upturn in the mining group stirred up another flurry in Carnegie Metals in the local market and there was a sharp bulge in the shares at the end of the week. The management issued a statement voicing its opinion that earnings would be largely increased by the end of the year and also announced that drilling tests had been ordered on the company's abandoned property at Cananea, Mexico, in the district in which Green Cananea Copper Company was reported to have made a sensational ore strike some time ago.

Expansion in the electric power field and continued high rate of operations in the building industry are absorbing copper steadily while the export agreement of the main producers has largely eliminated the costly competition heretofore incurred in the marketing of the metal to European consumers. The price seems firmly established around the present level of 14 to 14¼ cents a pound and while a higher figure is expected in some quarters the current price allows a fair margin of profit for the principal producers.

STEEL OUTPUT EQUALS FOUR-YEAR AVERAGE

Continuous Increase in Ingot Production Puts Rate 35 Per Cent Above December.

By B. E. V. LUTY.

Steel production this month is approximately equal to the March average in the last four years, March having been the high month in each of the years. There is a slight loss from March one year ago and two years ago, and a slight gain over March in 1925 and 1924. There has been a continuous increase for three months and ingot production estimated at 165,000 tons per working day for this month is 35 per cent over the December rate of 122,000 tons a day.

Having reached this high rate, production is not expected to decrease materially next month or even in May. Last year and the year before April was about 5 per cent under March while in the two preceding years the drop was greater.

A substantial March decrease in unfilled obligations on the books of all steel mills is to be expected, as there had previously been large increases and there has not been much strictly new buying, of late while there has been relatively little contracting for second quarter, first quarter contracts having been extended in various cases to cover a part or all of the new quarter.

Steel company earnings in the quarter are likely to show 20 per cent or more increase over earnings in the fourth quarter, which was a very poor one. Tonnage of shipments has increased about 30 per cent, and realized prices on shipments have averaged a trifle higher, while it would be natural to expect a slight decrease in unit cost of production. It would take a 45 per cent increase to make the Steel Corporation's earnings this quarter equal those in the March quarter of 1927 and 1926, when they ran between $45,000,000 and $46,000,000, while a 30 per cent increase would make close to $41,000,000 for this quarter.

CAPACITY INCREASED

The Steel Corporation made about 42½ per cent of last year's total steel ingot production or just a trifle below its recent average. From 1906 to 1913, inclusive, the corporation's proportion year by year lay within the limits of 55 and 60 per cent. The difficulty with the steel industry is that tonnage does not increase materially while except for short spells prices have had a declining tendency for five years and this is scarcely balanced by decreases in production cost. Last year's tonnage was just equal to that of 1923 and this year is not promising to do any better than 1923, whereas there has been some increase in capacity in the five years.

Thus far the year is running much the same as last year in point of tonnage. Output in the three months will be say 1 to 2 per cent above that in the first quarter of last year, while the distribution into lines of variation except that the automobile industry is taking a trifle more. Whether more steel will go into building this year than last cannot be predicted definitely from experience thus far, but the indication is in that direction. Fabricated structural steel lettings in the first two months ran 10 per cent above those of a year previous and 15 per cent above those of two years previous. Demand for sheets, pipe and nails for building purposes has been running approximately the same as in the last two years. Railroad buying of steel is, on the whole, off somewhat from last year and is off still more from 1926 and 1925. Rail orders placed for the present half year are about the same as those of a year ago. While total production of rails last year has not yet been reported, the Steel Corporation's rail production decreased 16 per cent from 1926 to 1927 whereas the corporation's output of all finished steel products decreased only 9.5 per cent. The agricultural implement industry is taking fully as much steel as a year ago, when its operation was very heavy, and perhaps, even a tribe more.

BUYERS COVERED

Recently formed opinions that that there would be no full test of advanced steel prices in the near future have been fully supported by the course of events in the market. It is perfectly clear that large buyers are substantially covered for April and May if not for the whole second quarter at levels well below the present asking prices of mills and at not much above the old prices. The various advances made during a period of about three months, up to a month ago, are not being realized on the major part of the shipments being made, and will not be for some time to come. They are not even in full force in all cases as to current buying of small lots. Bars, shapes and plates, for instance, advanced by the large mills a month ago to 1.90 cents, Pittsburgh, can be shaded on attractive orders and sometimes even on carload lots. The trend in average invoice prices has been slightly upward since the first of the year, particularly in the present month, and some slight further gain is to occur in the next couple months. Thus the irregular decline of several years has been arrested, but there is no prospect the mills will attempt further advances.

Pig iron has shown a little more activity by the placing of some second quarter tonnage. Connellsville coke has not improved at any time this year. The scrap market has lost ground since the first of the year, but has shown a better tone in the past week.

NOTES AND COMMENT

"RIGHT FROM THE FEED BOX"

Statements of J. J. Raskob, General Motors finance chairman, that he anticipates a price of $240 to $250 for the stock, recalls a prediction of one of the Morgan partners more than a year ago that the shares would more than double the price obtaining at that time. The famous "Cochran prediction" has more than made good as the present stock, selling around 190, represents not only a 50 per cent stock dividend, but a subsequent two-for one split-up of the shares. Mr. Raskob suggests probable earnings of $9 for the first half of the year. On the occasion of his sailing for Europe yesterday he said: "If the market holds, General Motors is bound to sell much higher. At present prices, General Motors is selling at around 12 times its earning power. Recent compilations show that 20 representative industrial stocks, including U. S. Steel, are selling at 15 to 16 times their earnings. I believe General Motors should sell at the same proportionate rate." Mr. Raskob stated that earnings of the corporation for the first six months of this year would approximate about $9 a share, so that he anticipated a market value for the stock in the neighborhood of $249 to $250 a share. Current business, Mr. Raskob declared, is running 30 per cent above last year. He added that a fair average rate of increase for the first two quarters of 1928 would be 25 per cent. He expressed confidence in the outlook for general business and for the automobile business and anticipates a record production and sales level for this year.

STOCK MARKET CREDIT

Comment from another Wall Street source, but somewhat different in tenor, also interested the stock market community yesterday morning, the remarks being those of Morton F. Stern, of J. S. Bache & Co., one of the big commission houses. Mr. Stern, also embarking for Europe said: "The optimism prevailing in Wall Street is certainly greater than is generally felt by business men throughout the country. It would be a trite saying to predict that—either the business of the country will have to pick up materially or stock prices, in a great many instances, will be adjusted downward. Loans approximating $4,000,000 do not seem to trouble speculators and investors. Short selling, which has been attempted both for corrective measures and also for profits, has furnished the basis for a continued advance in prices. We have heard of $5,000,000,000 spoken of as the peak of loans before the present market will be over, but it is my opinion that this amount will not be available for market purposes and we should run into a substantial price adjustment long before this figure is reached. The basis for this statement is the fact that if business of this country goes ahead rapidly enough to justify present price levels, there will not be sufficient money available to allow $5,000,000,000 of brokerage loans to be reached. If business does not improve rapidly the market result is self evident."

"THE HOUSE ON THE CORNER"

In these melodramatic days in Wall street, when human hope and folly run high, there is much talk about the new leadership in finance. Unquestionably, the present speculative cycle has brought an array of new names to the forefront—men like Cutten, Raskob, and the Fishers. A group of new multi-millionaires has been created by the upswing, but recent financial developments at home and abroad have also brought the time honored "House on the Corner" (of Broad and Wall streets) to a new crest of power and influence. In the recent speculative excitement, the socalled Morgan stocks, such as General Motors, Du Pont, General Electric, and Radio Corporation of America have been the outstanding leaders, with United States Steel, another Morgan stock, less volatile but within hailing distance of the highest peak attained since the corporation was launched in 1901. Under present spotty business conditions, strong and dominant corporations have been more prosperous relatively than the general miscellany of smaller companies, and the Morgan financed companies are among the top-notchers.

FAR FLUNG INFLUENCE

Moreover, with railroad credit restored, railroad securities, despite their recent comparative listlessness, are selling at or near the highest levels since the war. J. P. Morgan & Co. and Kuhn, Loeb & Co. underwrite most American railroad issues. In the foreign field, Morgan's chief governmental clients, whose financial position caused widespread public doubts until comparatively recently, have of late enormously strengthened themselves. France, Italy and Belgium have proceeded far on the road to recovery. While the elder J. Pierpont Morgan lived, he wielded greater personal influence than any present financier, but the house of Morgan as an organization probably was never as wealthy and as far flung in its successful interests as today. In singing sagas about the success of new operators, it is well for observers to recognize that the old giants have not yet given way to the newcomers. As of old, Morgan & Co. maintains a close alliance with the First National Bank, of which the octogenarian George F. Baker is the head.

THE COPPER STOCKS

While coppers thus far have been unable to show sustained strength, the buying has been coming from sources within the industry, where the sentiment is better than it has been in some time. Recently Wall street reports had it that a price of 15 cents a pound for copper metal was planned, but this is not the view in the trade. Stability is desired and any sharp run-up probably would result in a temporary cessation of buying and a subsequent reaction in the price which would unsettle conditions. Kennecott and Anaconda are looked upon as logical leaders of the metal group when a good advance gets under way, but Home Sound, Magma and Granby also are favored, the latter because of the anticipation of an early dividend.

RAILS UNDER ACCUMULATION

That accumulation has been in progress in many of the rail stocks is the statement made in well informed quarters. Scale buying has been noted particularly in a number of the standard dividend payers during all small recessions, and the demand is credited to interests who are identified with the railroads and who are apparently confident regarding the coming months.

NEWSPAPER "ADS" BEST

Consolidated Distributors, Inc., which operates a chain of 34 five-cent-to-$1 stores, in future will use local newspapers exclusively to market their wares, Jesse Froelich, president, announced. "Our experience in the auto accessory and radio supplies business has been that daily newspaper advertising is the quickest and most productive means of reaching the consumer direct,' he said. 'We found that proportionately we got more dollars in return for local newspaper advertising."

PIGGLY WIGGLY SALES

February sales of all Piggly Wiggly Corporation stores jumped to $15,760,536 from $13,918,924 in February last year, a gain of $1,841,612.

FRICK LIGHTS 350 OVENS

H. C. Frick Coke Co., subsidiary of United States Steel Corporation, has lighted 150 additional coke ovens at Phillips and 200 at Continental No. 1 near Uniontown, Pa. Additional ovens will be placed into operation soon.

COMMONWEALTH POWER

Consumers Power Company, subsidiary of Commonwealth Power Corporation had called its outstanding $7,825,100 first lien and unifying mortgage series D, 5½ per cent gold bonds, due 1954, for redemption at 105 and interest on May 1.

OVER 2,000,000 SHARES AGAIN

Transactions on the New York Stock Exchange exceeded 2,000,000 shares in yesterday's two-hour session, marking the third time since the present upturn began that this volume of business has been handled on an abbreviated week-end market.

There was considerable disagreement in reports as to whether trading last Thursday totaled over 4,000,000 shares. The most careful tabulation, checked and rechecked, shows the New York Stock Exchange ticker reported just a little more than 4,000,000 shares for the day. As an indication of the extent of the speculative orgy, that reported figure means that more than 5,500,000 shares of stock changed hands on the floor of the exchange in that session. Neither odd lots nor stopped-stock are reported on the tape. Odd-lot trading in normal markets equals 20 per cent of round lots, or 100-share orders. In big days, with the public trading heavily, the percentage of odd-lot trading often is higher. Stopped-stock transactions equal at least 10 per cent of a day's reported business. There is no official record of the total volume of trading.

BUILDING STATUS HEALTHY

Builders, investors and financiers will be interested in the nation-wide survey of building conditions compiled by Walter J. Greenebaum, the vice president of the Greenebaum Sons Investment Company. The views of bankers and financiers in 35 states embracing 103 cities. The building conditions indicate a healthy status. Of the total number of the 103 cities canvassed, 31 report the saturation point in all types of new buildings has not been reached. A surfeit of buildings exists in 21 cities and in 43 cities the opinion is divided on the subject. In the cities that can absorb new construction, the largest demand is for homes. Replying to the question of whether there is an abnormal amount of construction now in process, 72 cities report in the negative and only seven in the positive, while 24 are divided.

NATIONAL DAIRY PRODUCTS

Sales and earnings of the National Dairy Products Company have expanded steadily since its incorporation in 1921 when the Rieck-McJunkin properties of this city and the Hydrox Corporation of Chicago were consolidated to form the nucleus of the present great concern which includes the Sheffield Farms; Castles Ice Cream; Supplee-Wills-Jones and Bryer Ice Cream companies. In a comprehensive resume of the company's operations, H. S. Edwards & Co. conclude that "this company, along with the Borden Company, ranks as a leading factor in the dairy products and ice cream business in this country. In some ways the milk industry and allied activities may be considered as a form of quasi public utility, not in that the milk companies enjoy in any sense legal monopolies, but rather that the industry serves a demand that is relatively stable regardless of business conditions, which is in a considerable measure a business in a vital necessity, and which is subject to a constant growth. Securities of strong, well managed and conservatively capitalized companies in this field represent, therefore, safe and conservative investments with well assured prospects for enhancement of value."

SHORT BUYING KEEPS WHEAT LOSSES SMALL

Continuation of Liquidation Started Friday Gives Market Easier Tone.

CHICAGO, March 24.—A continuation of the liquidation started Friday gave an easier tone to the grains in the early trading. Buying by shorts, who were evening up for the week-end and commission house buying on the dips held prices within a comparatively narrow range and net declines were small.

Local and commission house selling caused wheat prices to open and average lower, but buying on resting orders checked all the dips. The market rallied later when shorts covered with an oversold condition apparent. Weakness in corn and the forecast for unsettled weather in the Southwest caused most of the selling. Closing prices registered losses of ⅛ to ⅜c, with the March at $1.39⅝, May, $1.39⅝; July, $1.36⅛, and September, $1.33⅛.

Corn prices opened lower and declined into the bids, but heavy short covering rallied the market. Fine weather for the movement and weakness in the cash market were factors in the decline. Corn finished ⅛ to ⅜c lower, with the March at 96⅝c; May, 99⅛c; July, $1.02, and September, $1.03.

Commission house selling of oats found a ready demand from locals, who were apparently reinstating liquidated lines. After an early slump prices rallied briskly and closed ⅛c up to ⅛c off.

The Northwest continued to sell the nearby rye futures and prices were sharply lower. The close showed rye futures unchanged to 2⅛c lower, with March the weakest.

BROAD TRADE GAINS SCORED IN NEW YEAR

Expansion Started in January Maintained, All Important Economic Agencies Agree.

By W. S. COUSINS

NEW YORK, March 24.—Practically all of the important economic agencies agreed that there has been a broad expansion in the various sections of American industrial activity since the turn of the year. Without question the gains which were made during January in business and industry have been generally maintained.

The Reserve Board's index figures deal very generously with the improvement in strategic lines; the annalist shows a 2½ per cent increase in industrial production up to last week and the Standard Statistics Company shows by facts and figures that the "recovery in aggregate physical output has been rapid."

The Production Index of this well known statistical organization shows that the volume has been increasing since the turn of the year, and is again near the record high level. Production for the last month was virtually as great as in February of 1927, and was only 5 per cent less than in March of last year, when the record peak for all time was reached. The Standard Statistics' production index for February of this year was 118.4, up 3.7 points above the January Index.

It goes without saying that a rate of industrial production only 15 per cent less than the high record for all time is nothing to be alarmed about, and indicates that American business is a much more lively corpse than it is credited to be in some quarters. Correspondents of European newspapers should take note, and cease forthwith sending their indigo-colored reports to their papers in London, Paris and Berlin. Ridiculous stories of "American business depression" have already appeared in the press of Europe and it is clearly time to call a halt.

With all of the present talk about unemployment at the industrial centers, and the reported decline in the purchasing capacity of the American working man, it should be remembered that in the month of February there were 51 increases in industrial wage schedules as compared with 14 decreases and a considerable gain in the number of workmen employed in the leading industries, particularly automobile manufacturing. A survey made by the Department of Labor at Washington is expected to disclose an upward trend to employment in other important industries in consequence of the reopening of spring business.

The last week has seen the first of the income tax problems of the year solved—the tabulation of the returns and payments made for a good share of the whole year's imposts. There is little doubt that Congress will at least pass a measure reducing the aggregate of federal income taxes by the $225,000,000 recommended by the President and Treasury Department officials.

The President opposes a larger cut unless the final March accounting shows an unexpected increase over the aggregate of the same date last year, and thus far it is seen that tax payments are up about $20,000,000 above expectations. So far, so good.

Textile industries have shown various results. Some concerns have realized handsome profits, while others show heavy losses. Modern methods and quickness to seize upon and meet changing conditions and styles are important elements in the textile industry, as has repeatedly been demonstrated in the last few years.

There is little or no speculation in commodities and inventories, land speculation has been curbed, and the riotous stock market, with manipulation beyond all reasonable limits, is the most unsettling factor on the business horizon.

January showed stocks of dry goods in the United States 15 per cent larger than a year before with sales 8 per cent more, but there were decreases in stocks of groceries of 16 per cent, shoes 2 per cent, hardware 7 per cent, drugs, agricultural implements, electric supplies, jewelry and silk goods 5 per cent. January wholesale sales for the country increased 7 per cent over December and about 1 per cent over a year before.

Compared with a year before the January price level for 550 commodities at wholesale, reported by the government, was a fraction lower than a year before. Such was the average made up of moderate to substantial advances for farm products, foods, textiles, hides and leather, and shoes, offset by considerable and sometimes large declines in coal, coke, oil and petroleum products, metals and metal products, building materials, chemicals, drugs, fertilizers, paper and tires. Lead at 5.75c and zinc at 5.45c are lower than since 1923.

BRIGHT RASKOB FORECAST PUTS STOCKS HIGHER

General Motors Chairman's Prediction of $9 Earnings Sends Shares to New Peak

By BROADAN WALL, Universal Service Financial Editor.

NEW YORK, March 24.—John J. Raskob put the stock market higher in another wild session this morning. He is on the S. S. Duilio en route to Europe, but the highly optimistic forecast he issued just before sailing Friday evening caused heavy buying of General Motors. It shot up over 4 points to a new high and pulled other industrials along before a wave of profit-taking wiped out part of the early gains. Hudson and Hupp held better than Motors in the closing selling wave and scored the best gains for the session.

Liquidating pool work was behind churning of Texas Gulf that put that stock among the leaders. Oils held around the highs reached Friday in somewhat quieter trading, while the railroad shares backed and filled in rather narrow price range. Foreign exchange was dull but steady. Cotton rallied a little further, but other commodities turned irregular on bearish weather advices.

SEES $9 EARNINGS

A good time was had by all at the farewell party to Raskob that brought out his forecast of $9 a share for General Motors for the first six months of this year. He thought Motors should sell at 15 times its earnings. Nevertheless there was quite heavy taking of profits after Motors reached its record high. Selling at 15 times its earning power Motors would not be out of line with many other recently active stocks. There is difference of opinion as to how much such stocks are out of line with warranted price levels. Incidentally Raskob is expected to be made a director of Radio soon. That stock again encountered heavy selling, but held firm.

The hand of Durant was evidenced in the rather spectacular performance of both Hudson and Hupp and his interest was spoken of in connection with the strength of Packard as well. Hudson earnings forecasts are fully as optimistic as that of Raskob on General Motors. As a result of improved income of the first six months it is thought that a stock dividend will be distributed. Packard, it was rumored, would offer new stock to shareholders in the near future at price just a little below the current market. By that time, according to the bulls, the rights to subscribe will have fairly good value.

NEW POOL IN TEXAS

The new pool in Texas Gulf, it was maintained, found a larger short interest than expected. It is the technical position of the stock that is largely responsible for its strength for while rumors are in circulation regarding favorable dividend action soon those associated with the management maintain that there is no chance of any change in payment or other important development for several months to come. Waldorf System was churned also as several firms issued bullish advice which was not entirely divorced from pool work reputedly conducted against options at prices below the current market.

BOND RETURNS DWINDLE FOR LAST 8 YEARS

Further Decrease of Rate on Money Invested in Securities Predicted by Expert.

By MERRYLE STANLEY RUKEYSER,
Universal Service.

NEW YORK, March 24.—For nearly eight years, the wages on capital, invested in bonds, have been declining.

The American people have been accumulating capital funds during this period more rapidly than ever before in economic history. The supply of investable funds has increased even more rapidly than the demand, which has been reflected in an unprecedented outpouring of security issues. This overflowing of the reservoir of investment funds has found a spectacular, none too sound counterpart in the recent violent surge of speculative stock prices. For several years, the flow of investment funds into common stocks has given a foundation for the erection of the speculative superstructure.

After the long upswing in bond prices, what policy is the conservative investor to follow? What is likely to be the future course of long-term interest rates, which have declined since 1920 with the exception of a six months' upward swing during the latter part of 1922 and the first part of 1923.

RATE DROP PREDICTED

David Friday, consulting economist, whose insight into the course of interest rates since the war has made him a pre-eminent authority on this subject, essayed the role of prophet before the savings bank division of the American Bankers Association.

Among his prophecies were the statements that Liberty bonds would be selling on a 3 per cent yield basis in three years, good railroad bonds on a 3½ per cent basis, and the best industrial and utility bonds on a 4 per cent basis. In the foreign field, Dr. Friday expressed the belief that within a year French internal government obligations, now selling on approximately a 6 per cent basis, would yield only 5 per cent. Doctor Friday in reply to a question, explained the mortgage rate on real estate investments has been higher than on bonds partly because of lack of complete confidence that the present high construction costs would be permanently sustained in values. He expressed the opinion that investors are becoming accustomed to present real estate values, and that accordingly the rate on the best grade of mortgages would decline.

GIVES "WHYS" FOR VIEWS

In giving the "whys" for his views, Dr. Friday pointed out:

"The supply of capital for the nation as a whole during any period is determined by the excess of its production over its consumption.

"With such a growth in output, it has been easy to increase our savings even though we were maintaining higher standards of living than ever before.

"There is no likelihood that the savings of our people will decline.

"While it is difficult to say what the demand for capital will be during the next five years, it seems probable that the outlook is rather for the slackening of the rate of increase than for an acceleration.

"With this outlook for capital accumulation and for investment demand, the investor will be obliged to accept smaller returns upon his funds. There have been periods in the history of this country when good railroad and industrial stocks sold at a price which capitalized their dividends at 4 per cent and their earnings at 6 or 7 per cent. High-grade bonds sold on a 3½ per cent basis; and good government securities yielded even less. Toward such an era our industrial and financial process is carrying us during the next few years."

TRADE VS. POLITICS

Although presidential years in the past have by no means been uniformly lacking in prosperity, leading business executives, who are optimistic, in discussing prospects for the remainder of the year, qualify their remarks with the assertion that business will be satisfactory barring untoward political developments.

What would be unsatisfactory in politics from the standpoint of business sentiment?

The big interests would prefer the continuance in office of the Republican party, although Col. Leonard P. Ayres, of the Cleveland Trust Company, presented data which indicated that over a period of 40 years prosperity ebbed and flowed irrespective of whether Republicans and Democrats were in power.

Well-informed financiers and business executives are of the opinion that Democratic prospects have been improved in the last 30 days by revelations in connection with the oil scandal.

The president of one large industrial corporation, who is singularly in position to reflect opinion of men of high rank in the financial and business world, said that the election of Gov. Smith would not prove disturbing to business, provided the Democrats did not also receive a clear majority in Congress. A Democratic Congress, he thought, would adversely affect business sentiment.

In normal periods political fluctuations have far less real effect on the course of trade than is commonly supposed.

NEW YORK CURB MARKET

NEW YORK, March 24.—(AP.)—The curb market was irregular today, the end of the week leaving a score of new favorites, mostly industrials, at higher levels and disclosing a sagging tendency on the part of most issues recently active in the advance.

Chain stores continued strong. Safeway advanced 17 points to a new high at 472, but was later reactionary, closing at 457, up 2 points net as compared with yesterday's net gain of 33 points. Metropolitan 5 & 50c preferred and Pender Groceries "B" also touched new highs. Canadian Industrial Alcohol moved up another 2 points to a new high at 42⅜. Gains of 1 to 4 points lifted Gorham preferred, Doehler Die Casting, Spang Chalfant and U. S. L. Battery to new high levels. Bancitaly recovered from its slump of yesterday, but was held to a small gain. Canadian Marconi and Spanish and General advanced less than a point each, the latter to a new peak at 5⅛.

Kalamazoo Stove and Holland Furnace, which made wide gains yesterday, were hammered down about 1 point each. Firestone Tire slumped 7 points on a small turnover, Ford of Canada dropped 5 and American Hardware 9.

A few utilities touched new highs, among them Central States Electric and United Electric certificates, although the latter lost all it gained and closed off 1 point net. Profit-taking kept other utilities near previous levels.

Oils and pipe lines were weak.

BUYING BOOSTS COTTON PRICES

NEW YORK, March 24.—(AP.)—The cotton market was higher today on trade buying and week-end covering, stimulated by prospects for showers or rains in the eastern belt, where generally dry warm weather is said to be needed. July contracts sold up to 19.27c, or 16 points net higher, and closed at 19.24c, the general market closing steady, at net advances of 11 to 13 points.

The market opened steady at an advance of 3 to 6 points in response to the forecast for showers in the South, and after reacting a few points under realizing worked higher on covering by recent sellers while there was some trade buying of near months accompanied by reiterated reports of shipments pending out of the local stock.

May contracts sold up from 19.23 to 18.97c, while October advanced from 18.78 to 18.97c, net advances of 15 to 20 points at the best levels of the morning. These prices attracted some realizing, but the close was within 3 or 4 points of the best.

The opinion was expressed by local brokers that the volume of probable shipments out of the local stock abroad had been underestimated and that shipments still to be made might aggregate well over 20,000 bales. The certificated stock here is now in the neighborhood of 160,000 bales, about 23,000 bales having been shipped out since the beginning of the month. The reduction in the local stock was regarded by some operators as tending to strengthen the position of near months and there was some further switching from May into later deliveries in today's trading.

New crop months were relatively firm at the close, however, on buying attributed to the fear of rains in the eastern belt and further delays in farm work. Private cables said hedging and Bombay selling in Liverpool had been absorbed by fair trade calling and local buying. They also reported that India was buying light cotton cloths more freely in Manchester.

The amount of cotton reported on shipboard awaiting clearance in this country at the end of the week was estimated at 99,000 bales, against 183,000 last year and 97,000 two years ago.

Cottonseed Oil Market.

NEW YORK, March 24.—The cottonseed oil market was firmer on a show of strength in the crude markets. Higher prices for cotton seemed to stimulate a better demand from refining interests and shorts. The close was firm at 3 to 9 points net advance. Sales, 8,000 barrels. Prime crude, $8.62½; prime summer yellow spot, $9.65; March, closed $9.75; May, $9.88; July, $10.25; September, $10.50; October, $10.49.

NEW YORK BOND MARKET

NEW YORK, March 24.—(AP.)—Low-priced railroad bonds again attracted buyers today, in one of the most active Saturday markets of the year. Total sales exceeded $8,000,000 (par value), approximately $2,000,000 above the average for a short session.

There was little in the day's news to influence trading one way or another, and the customary week-end profit-taking was of moderate proportions. The week's new offerings ran around the year's weekly average, totaling $114,000,000 against last week's aggregate of $73,000,000. The shipment yesterday of $12,000,000 gold to France had little effect, as earmarked metal is not regarded as a factor in the money market.

Among the high grade railway issues, Great Northern 4½s were the only liens to show outstanding activity. This issue sold up to 101⅝, a new year's high, and a gain of 1 point. Low priced transportation liens which received the best treatment included International Great Northern 6s, St. Paul 5s and the two Ulster and Delaware issues. The St. Paul bonds, however, lost their gains in the last few minutes of trading.

Dodge Brothers 6s advanced a point on strong demand, and Pathe Exchange 7s, with warrants, again started upward. Convertibles, in the main, were more quiet than in recent sessions.

Easing tendencies appeared in many of the foreign obligations, principally Latin American. Scandinavian and some central European issues French governmental 7s and 7½s, however, continued to advance in record high territory.

United States government bonds were unusually quiet.

Stronger Tone in Wholesale Markets

49 Advances, 17 Declines

NEW YORK, March 24.—Price changes this week in the wholesale markets for the commodities of chief consumption were again featured by a substantial excess of advances, 49 out of the 65 alterations recorded in the list of quotations collected by Dun's Review being in an upward direction, as against 16 declines.

Food Index Higher

NEW YORK, March 24.—Bradstreet's Food Index Number for this week is $3.37, as compared with $3.34 last week, $3.34 two weeks ago, and $3.46 for the week ending March 24, 1927. This week's number shows a gain of nine-tenths of 1 per cent over last week, but shows a decrease of 2.6 per cent from the like week a year ago.

Of 82 commodities of all kinds, 21 advanced as compared with last week, 6 declined, and 56 remained unchanged, as follows:

Increase—Red wheat, spring wheat, corn, oats, barley, corn flour, mess pork, salted ribs, lard, butter, raw sugar, cotton-seed oil, potatoes, currants, sheep, lambs, oleo oil, cotton, tin spelter and rubber.

Decreased—Eggs, beeves, hogs, Chicago steel scrap, copper and antimony.

Unchanged—Flour, rye flour, hams, smoked ribs, tallow, cheese, refined sugar, coffee, tea, tapioca, beans, peas, apples, peanuts, rice, molasses, raisins, prunes, lemons, Pacific hops, New York hops, condensed milk, evaporated milk, macaroni, print cloths, gray goods, brown sheetings, ginghams, fine combination wool, half-blood combination wool, linseed oil, kerosene, crude petroleum, gasoline, hides, leather, hay, basic pig iron, Bessemer pig iron, southern pig iron, Bessemer steel billets, O-H steel billets, steel rails, steel bars; old car wheels, Philadelphia; old car wheels, Chicago; Pittsburgh steel scrap, Chicago cast iron, wire nails, tin-plates, coke, lead, yellow pine, West Virginia spruce, Douglas fir and alcohol.

BUSINESS FAILS TO GAIN HERE

The R. G. Dun & Co. Weekly Trade Review says regarding trade conditions in the Pittsburgh district:

"There has been no improvement in the local trade situation during the last week, weather conditions having interfered to a considerable extent with the movement of seasonable merchandise, and conditions in the coal mining sections have shown no improvement. Local department stores are not transacting a normal volume of business at the present time, and stores specializing in wearing apparel are complaining of slow business. Quietness prevails with the wholesale dry goods houses, although some orders are being placed for fall delivery of heavy underwear, blankets, and kindred items. Women's wearing apparel, while showing a slight improvement in demand, is far from active, while there is a fair demand for millinery.

Jobbers of men's and boys' clothing complain of the light demand thus far this season, and some retailers still are endeavoring to reduce their stock of winter merchandise. There is a moderate improvement in the demand for hardware and farm implements, while lumber and building materials still are moving slowly. Drugs, confectionery and tobacco are not up to normal demand, and in the two latter lines complaint is made of price-cutting interfering with normal profits. Groceries are not very active, while the provision trade is reported quite fair for this period of the year.

There has been but little change in the rate of operations of industrial plants in the vicinity, with steel mills operating at close to 80 per cent, and some concerns reporting receipts of very fair volume of orders, while others complain of some decrease in that respect. There has been fairly good buying of some types of electrical equipment, although the average buying is below that of a year ago. Radio equipment is in somewhat lighter demand. The plants manufacturing sanitary equipment are operating at a fairly good rate, and manufacturers of radiators and heating equipment are quite busy. Orders for plate glass while slightly lower, are satisfactory, and production is being maintained at close to 90 per cent of capacity. The window glass demand is fairly steady, with production showing little change from that prevailing for the past month. There has been a slight increase in the production of crude oil, with prices remaining steady.

Bituminous coal production continues at the rate of about 10,000,000 tons weekly and there has been no improvement in demand, many consumers apparently depending upon their surplus stock for current needs. Western Pennsylvania grades per net ton are quoted as follows: Steam coal, $1.40 to $1.80; coking coal, $1.50 to $1.75; gas coal, $1.75 to $1.90; steam slack, 90c to $1; gas slack, $1 to $1.10, and domestic sizes, $2.50 to $2.75.

Miami Chief, 6 Police Charged With Prisoner Murders

OFFICERS PUT BEHIND BARS IN FIVE DEATHS

Grand Jury Hints Amazing Facts to Come—Shooting Of Bellboy Told.

MIAMI, Fla., March 24.—(AP.)—The chief of this city's police department and six of his subordinates were in the county stockade today charged with murder, while ringing in the ears of the entire force was a grand jury's vitriolic denunciation of "brutal, inhuman and astounding" conduct of law enforcement affairs throughout Miami.

Announcing that it will reconvene April 10, the grand jury indicated sensational further developments to come, declaring there were other crimes disclosed to it which "will shock the public conscience," but for which indictments have not been returned because of "our inability to fix individual responsibility."

Chief of Police H. Leslie Quigg, now suspended, was indicted yesterday for murder, as was Detective R. L. Wood. These officers were added to the police colony at the county stockade, which already consisted of Lieut. M. A. Tibbits, Detectives John Caudell and Tom Nazworth, and Patrolmen Nelson Ward and R. L. Glisson. All indictments were concerned with deaths of persons with whom those indicted had contact in an official capacity.

NEW ACTING CHIEF

Guy C. Reeve, head of the detective department, today was made acting chief, and H. H. Arnold was named director of public safety. Arnold's first act was to order reinforcement of patrols in the Negro districts, where resentment against recent police activities is said to be high.

The grand jury report on its police department investigation, which is called incomplete, said in part:

"Taking of testimony regarding the department has further disclosed that this (previously referred to) lack of morale in the police force has contributed in no small degree to the amazing growth of unlawful practices in the territory served by them, and while our efforts have been directed primarily to an inquiry regarding the handling of human beings we have been subjected to much information involving and connecting some branches of the police department with Miami's underworld. We have become thoroughly convinced that the open violations of law on the part of gamblers, bootleggers and houses of ill fame are permitted because of an unquestionable alliance with many law enforcement officers."

Police methods of handling prisoners drew chief attention in the report and was described by the jurors' pronouncement as 'terrifying and damnable."

QUIGG BEHIND BARS

Chief Quigg yesterday joined Lieut. Tibbits and the two detectives, Caudell and Nazworth, behind the bars because of their alleged connection with the death of H. Kier, Negro bellboy in a local hotel. His death occurred two and one-half years ago, after his arrest on charges of attempting unsolicited liaison between the daughter of a hotel guest and another patron whom the young lady did not know. When Kier's body was found, police declared they knew nothing of how he was slain.

Quigg is charged with complicity in covering up the manner of the slaying, which witnesses told the grand jury came at the hands of Nazworth, on a deserted country road, where the three officers had the Negro to "work on him." Tibbits is said to have been wounded when Nazworth's first shot at the Negro went wild. Caudell was named as a member of the party.

The chief was said to have ordered Kier held without entry on the police blotter when he was arrested and later to have conspired with his three subordinates in keeping the circumstances a secret.

Wood, indicted for second degree murder, is said to have shot Victor W. Parnell, a white carpenter, to death in November, 1926. Parnell, according to State's Attorney N. Vernon Hawthorne, who made the details of the indictment public, was walking along a road with a companion when a police automobile sped by, barely missing the pedestrians. The car stopped, according to the quoted records, and Wood jumped out, firing four shots, killing Parnell. At the time Wood explained the incident by saying he stopped to question the carpenter and fired in self defense when Parnell gestured toward his pistol.

MYSTERY DEATHS

Patrolmen Ward and Glisson are charged with the murder of John Mabry, a Negro prisoner, and have been in jail a week. The circumstances of Mabry's death have not been divulged.

The grand jury further charged that an aged white man, whose name was not given, had died within the past week from injuries received at the police station.

A Negro reported to have hanged himself in jail, it was contended, did not take his own life, but came to death as a result of police cruelty.

The grand jury was hopeful, when its investigation of police affairs started, the report said, that such practices were unusual and not sponsored by anyone in authority.

"But to our amazement," it went on, "it developed beyond all doubt that the persons in charge of this department not only condoned and ratified such violences on the part of their subordinates but in a number of instances have themselves led the assaults and become the chief executioners."

ESTATE SEEKS REFUND ON TAX

United States Senator David A. Reed and Joseph M. Browne, executors of the estate of Gertrude St. John Wood, Saturday filed two actions seeking a refund of $6,560.56 paid by the decedent as income taxes for the years 1919-20-21-22. The action was filed in Federal District Court.

One suit seeks judgment of $2,-925.08 from D. B. Heiner, collector of internal revenue, and the other judgment of $2,735.53 from C. G. Lewellyn, former collector, representing assessments made on stock dividends of the American Window Glass Machine Company. The bills of complaint aver the assessments were erroneous and illegal, as the stock was not subject to federal income or surtax, as the dividend payments were from a surplus accumulated prior to March, 1913, or before the income tax became effective.

The bills set forth that the commissioner of internal revenue rejected claims for the refunds sought.

Mrs. Wood died in May, 1924.

Unable to Run, Jail Crasher Eludes Police

Newton Vassar, Negro dope peddler, described as a human skeleton from the ravages of tuberculosis, refused admittance to the Westmoreland County jail, has enjoyed at least 36 hours of freedom. He walked out of the jail at Greensburg Friday, while kindly disposed officials were hunting a sandwich for him.

Vassar, also known as "Ten Nite" from a successful 10-day flirtation with Lady Luck and the "galloping dominoes," is under a year's sentence to Atlanta prison for peddling dope. While awaiting transfor and was granted a removal from fer to the Southern prison he asked the Allegheny County jail to Westmoreland County jail on account of his physical condition. At Greensburgh he was denied admittance to the jail and it was while awaiting his return to Pittsburgh that he walked out of the warden's office.

According to officers, Vassar could not run 50 feet, yet his brief start enabled him to elude State police and highway patrolmen since noon Friday.

Hagerstown Man Commits Suicide

HAGERSTOWN, Md., March 24.—(AP.)—Robert Patterson, 46, a carpenter who had been unemployed for some time, was found dead in the cellar of his home this afternoon with a bullet through his head. Acting Coroner Bitner issued a certificate of suicide.

MINING TOWN IS TERRORIZED

Shooting by Negro strike-breakers broke out at Bruceton Saturday afternoon, according to a report to state police at the Library sub-station. The man responsible for the shooting is known, it is said, and troopers are looking for him. A number of Negro women accompanied the gunman, troopers were told.

Residents of union barracks in Bruceton said the man appeared on the road above the barracks about 12:30 o'clock Saturday afternoon and fired several shots from a revolver. None of the bullets caused any damage. The man was chased by union people, who say he reappeared a short time later, armed with a shotgun and accompanied by a number of women.

Justice of the Peace J. A. O'Rourke, of Broughton, was called by the terrified residents of Bruceton and the "squire" notified state police. Coal and iron police employed by the Pittsburgh Terminal Coal Corporation are investigating the shooting also, it is said.

Dilks Flashes Comeback in Pyle's Marathon Race

NEW CASTLE'S ENTRANT 16TH IN LONG RUN

Caravan Encounters Difficulties in Maze of New Mexico Roads.

Souminen Retains Lead With Almost 750 Miles Covered. Payne Second, Briton 3rd.

By LELAND C. LEWIS,
International News Service Special Correspondent.

THOREAY, New Mexico, March 24.—With the Continental Divide conquered at an altitude of 7,465 feet C. C. (Cross Country) Pyle's bunion derbyists tarried here for the night before swinging down 31.3 miles to Grants Sunday. Highway 66, the "Main Street of America," due to enforced detours in the vicinity of Grants, is a maze that required Pyle's advance scouts to spend several hours in choosing one of some 40 trails on which the caravan might carry through without becoming lost.

[illegible] at motorists forced [illegible] route have beaten [illegible] rush and mesquite in respective courses.

Earl Dilks of New Castle, Pa., came back Saturday on the Gallup-Thoreau trek of 32.3 miles, covering that distance in 6:00:10. He was sixteenth to the control, bringing his elapsed time to that same position for the 741.6 miles from Los Angeles to 159:09:02.

John Stone, Marion, Ind., was thirty-eighth today in 6:25:30 elapsed time.

OUTSIDER CARRIES ON

Paul Simpson, Burlington, N. C., who was seventy-fourth when the field started from Gallup, carried on despite blistered feet and told officials in patrol cars that he expected to reach Thoreau before the midnight deadline hour.

Here are the 16 leaders with their elapsed time for the 741.6 miles from Los Angeles:

1—Arne Soumen, Detroit		126:51:25
2—Andrew Payne, Claremore, Okla.		129:49:57

West Penn quota of the Olympic fund.

Quite a number of clubs in the district also have agreed to play games for the fund during the next few weeks. So the outlook is not so dark after all.

Some local soccer men have been working on the Glasgow Rangers' visit to the United States and trying to bring the club to Pittsburgh on the date alloted to Cleveland, June 9.

The only drawback at the present time is the fact that the sponsors of the tour are demanding that the guarantee of $5,000 be placed in a bank 30 days before the game. This guarantee is quite large for Western Pennsylvania where professional soccer has not been developed and where 12,000 is the record gate.

However, if the money can be guaranteed locally the writer feels that the game between Western Pennsylvania and the Rangers would be played to a 20,000 crowd.

JUNKERS BEATEN

HAVE KIDNEYS EXAMINED BY YOUR DOCTOR

Flush your kidneys by drinking a quart of water each day, also take salts occasionally, says a noted authority, who tells us that too much rich food forms acids which almost paralyze the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you may suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, sour stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To help neutralize these irritating acids, to help cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Knights of Columbus, the Celtics showed enough class to substantiate the claim that they stand in a class by themselves insofar as professional basketball is concerned.

The Morrys, however, surprised the large assemblage by the manner in which they forced the New Yorkers to extend themselves in order to establish their superiority. The locals, despite the fact that they had not seen active competition for more than a week, acquitted themselves creditably against their stronger opponents. While they did not come up to the standard of the champions by reason of poor passing, they displayed enough form to keep the winners on their toes throughout. Those who came to the game with the impression that it would prove a walkaway for the Easterners received a rude surprise.

HOLMAN STARS

Banks, Dehnert and Holman were the main guns in the Celtics' attack. The ever-elusive Holman, aided by years of experience that have made him one of the greatest professional stars the game has ever known, pleased the crowd by his uncanny passing ability. Assisted by Davy Banks, the leading scorer of the American League during the season recently closed, Holman led the attack for the winners. He came through with five baskets and assisted materially in the manufacturing of the others scored by the Celtics. Banks was close on his heels, the Philadelphia Hebrew getting a quartet of double-deckers.

Klinzing, Littell and Wallace played brilliant basketball for the locals. Littell shone brilliantly for the Pittsburghers. He and Klinzing each connected with the hoop for four baskets.

The Morrys assumed the lead at the outset and were leading, 16 to 15, with the half drawing to a close. Banks and Holman, however, came through with field goals just before the gun was fired to give the Celtics a 19-to-16 lead at the halfway point.

The Celtics got the range of the baskets in the last half and never were headed thereafter. Aided considerably by their incomparable passing attack, John Whitty's charges forged to the front and piled up their comfortable lead.

The contest drew an appreciative crowd, many coaches from schools and universities in this vicinity being in attendance with the idea of getting some pointers on how the champions play. They were well repaid for their visit.

RED McMAHANS LOSE

The preliminary game, between the Lou Gordon Juniors and the Red McMahans, was the third and final battle of a three-game series to determine the junior championship. The Lou Gordons, playing their best game of the season, won the title by a margin of seven points, 24 to 16.

The Gordons, with Skeegan playing a stellar role, assumed the lead at the first tipoff and managed to keep it throughout. The McMahans proved a big disappointment to their followers, failing to show their customary form. The lineups of the two games:

N. Y. Celtics—32		Ex Morrys—26
Banks	F	Klinzing
Barry	F	Littell
Leonard	C	Ramsey
Holman	G	Wallace
Dehnert	G	Loeffler
Celtics	19	13—32
Ex Morrys	16	10—26

Substitutions—McNicker for Loeffler. Field Goals—Banks 4, Barry 2, Leonard, Holman 5, Dehnert 3, Klinzing, Littell 4, Wallace 2. Foul Goals—Celtics 2 out of 3, Ex Morrys 6 out of 7. Referee, Salador.

Lou Gordons—24		Red McMahans—16
Kalson	F	Huddy
Levine	F	Jacko
Pratt	C	Mason
Rotey	G	Savelka
Skeegan	G	Botz
Lou Gordons	14	9—23
McMahans	6	10—16

Substitutions—Moll for Levine; Shack for Jacko, Lesnyin for Botz, Bourque for Savelka. Field Goals—Kalson 2, Levine, Pratt 3, Huddy 2, Savelka, Mason 2. Foul Goals—Gordons 17 out of 27, McMahans 4 out of 10. Referee, Buckley.

Carpentier Faces Kayo Puncher in Mike Dundee

By HARRY KECK,
Sun-Telegraph Sports Editor.

AMONG the gents in the featherweight and lightweight classes who have been knocked out by Mike Dundee, of Rock Island, Ill., are:

Johnny Datto.
Harry Kabakoff.
Mike Ballerino.
Benny Gould.
Syd Conn.
Ruby Stein.
Frankie Tucker, of California.
And many others.

Dundee is the tough young assault and battery artist they are feeding U. S. Carpentier, of New Kensington, in the windup of the card of four eight-round battles at Motor Square Garden Monday night. He has been in town several days training for the bout and freely predicting that Carpentier's name will be added to that Sleepland list. And his manager, the erudite Dick Curley, of New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and points North, South, East and West, has been vigorously seconding the motion.

If Carpentier, the best of the local feathers, can get past Dundee he will be set for some good fights, for Dundee is one fellow the good ones do not care to meet because of his wallop. Carp has the boxing skill, experience and damaging left hand to stand him off if anybody around here can, and has a chance of upsetting the dope. It ought to be quite a fight.

The preliminary card for Monday night also promises much. Young Rudy, Charleroi's first citizen, mixes with Georgie Harris, of Niles, O., in the semi-final, and Stanley Simmons, of Lawrenceville, and Jack O'Connell, Cleveland's roughhouser, do their stuff a fourth time in the second number. O'Connell won the first battle, at Motor Square, then dropped a decision to Stanley at New Castle and last Monday night was knocked out by Stanley in two rounds at Warren. Jimmy Belmont, of Braddock, and Eddie Raven, of the North Side, open the show.

DAVIES BOXES KELLY

A number of local boxers will be active out of town Monday night. Willie Davies boxes Billy Kelly again at Scranton; his stablemate, Young Saylor, meets a tough puncher in Larry Brignolia, of Boston, at Oil City; Teddy Welch, of McKeesport, boxes Steve O'Malley, and Frankie Porto, of McKeesport, meets Young Sweeney at East Liverpool, O. Bob Moody and Al Heffron, amateurs, will compete in Cleveland, while Dan Billick and Andy Andrucci, two more simonpures, are billed for a special show at the New York A. C.

Phil Goldstein, local lightweight, returns from a successful campaign in the East, recently culminated with a victory over Ray Mitchell, of Philadelphia, at Newark, to box California Joe Gans in the windup of the weekly show at McKeesport, Thursday night.

Two North Side boxers, Joe Elrene and Tom Warde, are on the program at Johnstown Thursday night. The former meets Mickey Doyle, of Scranton, in the windup, and the latter boxes Bill Dashkowitz in one of the prelims.

LOMSKI VS. SEKYRA

The two big shows in New York this week will feature Mike McTigue against Tony Marullo at the St. Nicholas Club Monday night and Leo Lomski against Joe Sekyra at Madison Square Garden Friday night. The winner of the latter bout will box Tommy Loughran for the light-heavyweight title later.

Joey LaGrey, of Johnstown, boxes Harry (Kid) Groves at Cumberland Tuesday night.

The final amateur boxing show of the season at the Y. M. H. A. is scheduled for Thursday night. Nine bouts will be offered.

Charley Luck, of the North Side, who handles Jackie Rodgers, the flyweight, has just signed Joe Elrene to a three-year contract and would like to match him against Jack McFarland, of Wilkinsburg, who now is under the management of Jim Buchanan, of Charleroi, U. S. Carpentier or any of the other featherweights. Luck also has added Battling Spineilo, of Ohio, to his stable and would like to match him against Young Saylor, Joey LaGrey or any other welterweight.

GIBBONS BROTHERS READY

Jules Bock, of Duquesne, has the Gibbons brothers, Dick and Ed, heavyweights, ready for battles with any of the big fellows. Dick, who is only 18, has had four professional fights, scoring two knockouts and then boxing Stanley Simmons and Ray Fay. Ed is 21. Both are six-footers of promise. Sammy Gross, 118-pounder, is another member of the Beck stable.

The annual A. M. A. senior championships will be held at Motor Square Garden by Islam Grotto, M. O. V. B. E. R., Friday and Saturday nights, April 13 and 14. Entries close April 9.

Patsy Gallagher, South Side featherweight, wants to fight the winner of the U. S. Carpentier-Mike Dundee battle.

Amateur bouts will be a feature of the stag night of Syria Temple A. A. O. N. M. S. in Syria Mosque Friday night. A 1928 membership card will admit members and visiting Shriners.

ALLAND F. C.

able to cook one's steak or pork chops, or whatever he is going to eat, while she serves it! The process has been tried out and is quite successful; a potato can be baked or fried in less time than it takes to tell it, and the same goes for almost all other foods. A variety of special dinners is being planned at moderate prices. A cafeteria and a cafe will be adjacent the main dining room.

The kitchen will be directly in the rear of the bathers' grill on the first floor. The garage, walled off, will run along the oblong sides of the spacious clubhouse, with the engine room and powerhouse close at hand.

TO HAVE OWN GAS LIGHT

One of the big money-savers of the club will be in generating its own electricity and in using its own gas. Its salt water for the bathing pool will be drilled from sea level, or about 1,000 feet below the surface. And, of course, it will have a plentiful supply of its own fresh spring water.

On the north and south sides of the ground floor will be the locker and dressing rooms for men and women. There will be no less than 19 dressing rooms in both men's and women's quarters; 36 baths, 50 showers, 1,526 individual double-tier lockers and 574 general lockers. Each dressing room, four in all, will cover a space of 20 by 200 feet, and the locker rooms, also four, 16 by 200 feet, giving ample room for a big crowd.

The indoor tennis court will be at the west end of the pool. It will be large, and possibly two badminton courts will be in play when it is not being used for tennis.

At the extreme north end of the building will be a gymnasium 60 by 100 feet, where the apparatus work and basketball will be played. A wire cage will separate it from an indoor baseball diamond, 60 by 60 feet. Alongside of it will be a volley ball court, 30 by 50 feet, and next to it will be a handball court, 25 by 60 feet. A balcony will overlook the handball court.

GALLERY FOR BOWLERS

At the northwest corner will be three squash racquet courts, and a room containing 11 bowling alleys. A grandstand will run down over top of the squash courts so that almost 1,000 persons can be spectators during a bowling tournament, and everyone will be able to see every bit of action on each alley without obstruction. The bowling alleys will be in a room 90 by 60 feet, and the squash tennis courts about 25 by 60 feet.

With the cages separating the gym, baseball and volleyball courts taken down, a dance floor accommodating 2,500 persons without crowding is to be had. This space is 60 to 320 feet over all.

On the north side of the building on the upper floor, or just off of the third balcony, one finds, from the east to west, a cafe adjacent the main dining hall, a music room, 40 by 50 feet; a reception room, 60 by 50 feet; a parlor, 40 by 50 feet; a women's lounge, 60 by 50 feet; lavatories; men's lounge, 60 by 50 feet, with special stairways leading to the locker and dressing rooms; a game room, 60 by 50 feet; a library, 40 by 50 feet; and a billiard and pool room, 90 by 50 feet.

A sun promenade will extend the length of the building.

On the south side, an enclosed theater, with moving picture machine and stage, will be enclosed in a space 200 by 40 feet. It will have a private entrance and stairway from the outside at one end for the purpose of private club meetings entertainment, et cetera.

At the other end, also 200 by 40 feet, will be the children's nursery and play room, with two women attendants in constant charge. This also has an entrance to the private stairway that leads to be aforementioned theater.

A corridor will lead back to sleeping quarters. There will be 120 outside rooms in a double tier the length of the building. These rooms will accommodate 250 persons. Quarters for 500 can be arranged in case of necessity, or for a convention or like event.

WINTER BATHING

Covering the whole of the three and one-half acres of ground that the clubhouse itself covers, will be a roof of individuality that will literally rain sunlight throughout the building, winter and summer alike. A composition similar to celluloid and transparent as glass will permit sunshine enough to sunburn winter swimmers and make them think they're in balmy Florida or Southern California. Beach and pool will be covered with actinic glass—and that's what helps put on the tan. It is also a safeguard against anything that might cause the roof to give way. Where glass might kill many persons, actinic will do no injury.

Rome, in its prime made effective use of the thermae or Turkish bath, and with the Alland Field Club's facilities there may be had at any time.

Shooters will find pleasure in the revolver and rifle ranges, up to 200 yards; traps for clay-bird shooting will be set up. Bait and fly casting also may be indulged in by sportsmen at arranged times.

All in all, virtually every sort of social and club life activity will be cared for, starting with a pleasing lobby, sun promenade, lounges, reading, writing, palm and game rooms, large ball room, together with all of the sport facilities. It will be complete in all appointments for convenience and comfort, catering, as it will, to as great a variety of tastes as the most careful study of clubhouse activities can contrive to conceive. It is not to be a club for man alone, nor for women or children alone—it is to be a family club, and for that reason it has provided ample conveniences for no less than 3,000 members and their families.

The clubhouse will be laid out artistically and will be ornamented with flowers, shrubbery, gardens, drives, walks, etc. There is a bridle path more than 25 miles long near the club.

CLUB TO BE KEPT CLEAN

L. W. McIntire, Carnegie Tech graduate and well-known in engineering and club circles throughout the country, who is located at 706 Penn avenue, Wilkinsburg, is chairman of the board of trustees. His gigantic project of years of labor is about to be realized. And Western Pennsylvania will profit by his work—the Alland Field Club, greatest athletic organization ever conceived in the country!

McIntire has assured us that the board of trustees will see to it that the club is to be kept thoroughly clean and sportsmanlike through out. On Sunday it will not be opened until after 1 o'clock so that club activities will not interfere with one's religious devotion.

Good-Bye, Boys, I'm Through; Words, Music by Jack Dempsey

SAN FRANCISCO, March 24.—(AP.)—Jack Dempsey gave his best when he tried to knock the championship crown from Gene Tunney's head at Chicago last summer; his best was not enough and he is through with the ring forever, he said here today.

"My fighting days are over, and no one knows it better than myself," Dempsey said, "I know I can't go on forever. I gave everything I had against Gene Tunney last summer. Some that sat in the great crowd at Soldiers Field thought I knocked him out. Maybe I did; maybe I didn't. The fact remains that Tunney was declared the winner. I am not taking one iota of credit away from him. All I can say is that I gave the public the best I had in me and that wasn't enough to bring me victory."

Dempsey said he had made "enough money" to keep his wife and himself and he had "no complaint to make." Other than to keep in condition, he said he would not don the gloves again.

The big game scored by Schmidt in his singles also enabled him to take third place in the all-events with 1,882. He made 376 in the five-men event and 604 in his doubles.

brand as the eight cueists in the race of the Pittsburgh Three-Cushion Billiard League scamper down the home stretch of the loop's first season. Every player will receive a prize, but with only a few more games to play the fight of the players to move a notch higher and get the higher amount is making every match bitterly contested. As it stands now, William Greenwood, of Ellis', appears to have the championship won, although Robert Carter, of Kaimer's, is only two games behind him. If Carter is able to beat Billy when they play Wednesday night at Kaimer's, he will have a fairly good chance of catching the downtown ace and grabbing the first premium, $250, or, since Carter rates as an amateur, a medal of that value. Thus Wednesday night's game should be one of the best of the season.

Eddie Smith, of Dimling's, looks good for third place at this stage, while George Pitfield, of the same room, has a battle on his hands to stay fourth, being closely pressed by Harry Quinn, of Kenny's, and threatened by William Eichenmiller, of Rudy's, who has won his last seven games and is playing the best game in the league right now.

Joe Carrie, of Ellis', may be able to better is percentage a bit this week, as he plays three times, as does E. Z. Wainwright, of Rudy's.

The complete prize list follows: First, $250; second, $175; third, $160; fourth, $75; fifth, $60; seventh, $15; eighth, $25, with $30 for high run, now held at 12 by Greenwood.

Joe Falcaro, Greater New York bowling champion, and W (Dutch) Cliffe, of Utica, will clash in a ten-pin match for a purse of $1,000 on the Dwyer's Broadway Alleys in New York, and the Palace Alleys in Utica, beginning next Saturday night. Ten games will be rolled each night, three nights' rolling being scheduled in New York and three more in Utica, and the clash has attracted a great deal of interest. Cliffe recently won the fifth annual individual championship on the Dwyer's Alleys, while Falcaro was champion last year and the year before. Reserved seats are being sold for the event.

The first annual duckpin tournament to be rolled on the Nuss Brothers' Alleys, Homestead, will get under way Monday and last all week.

The Muck brothers will stage their fifth annual tenpin tourney April 9 to 18. During the last four years this tourney required only six days, but this season three days will be added because of the events only will be rolled guaranteed cash prizes at stake. A fee of $2.50 will be charged for each event and entries close at midnight Saturday April 7. For further information and entry blanks communicate with Mike Rudman, tournament manager, care of Muck Brothers, 701 Braddock avenue, Braddock; telephone Braddock 2188.

PARKERSBURG, W. Va., March 24.—Nearly 50 teams have been entered and a large number of crack bowling outfits from all sections of the state are expected to take part in the first annual West Virginia state bowling tournament to be held in Parkersburg, April 16-21. The matches will be rolled on the Recreation Alleys.

Robert (Tex) Rickard of Charleroi achieved the ambition of every bowler Friday evening when he turned in a perfect 300 score in duckpins. Rickard achieved his feat while rolling for Charleroi in a team match against Brownsville, on the Casper alleys Brownsville. Rickard finished one game with four straight strikes and in the second rolled 12 more for a perfect score and a record of 16 strikes in a row.

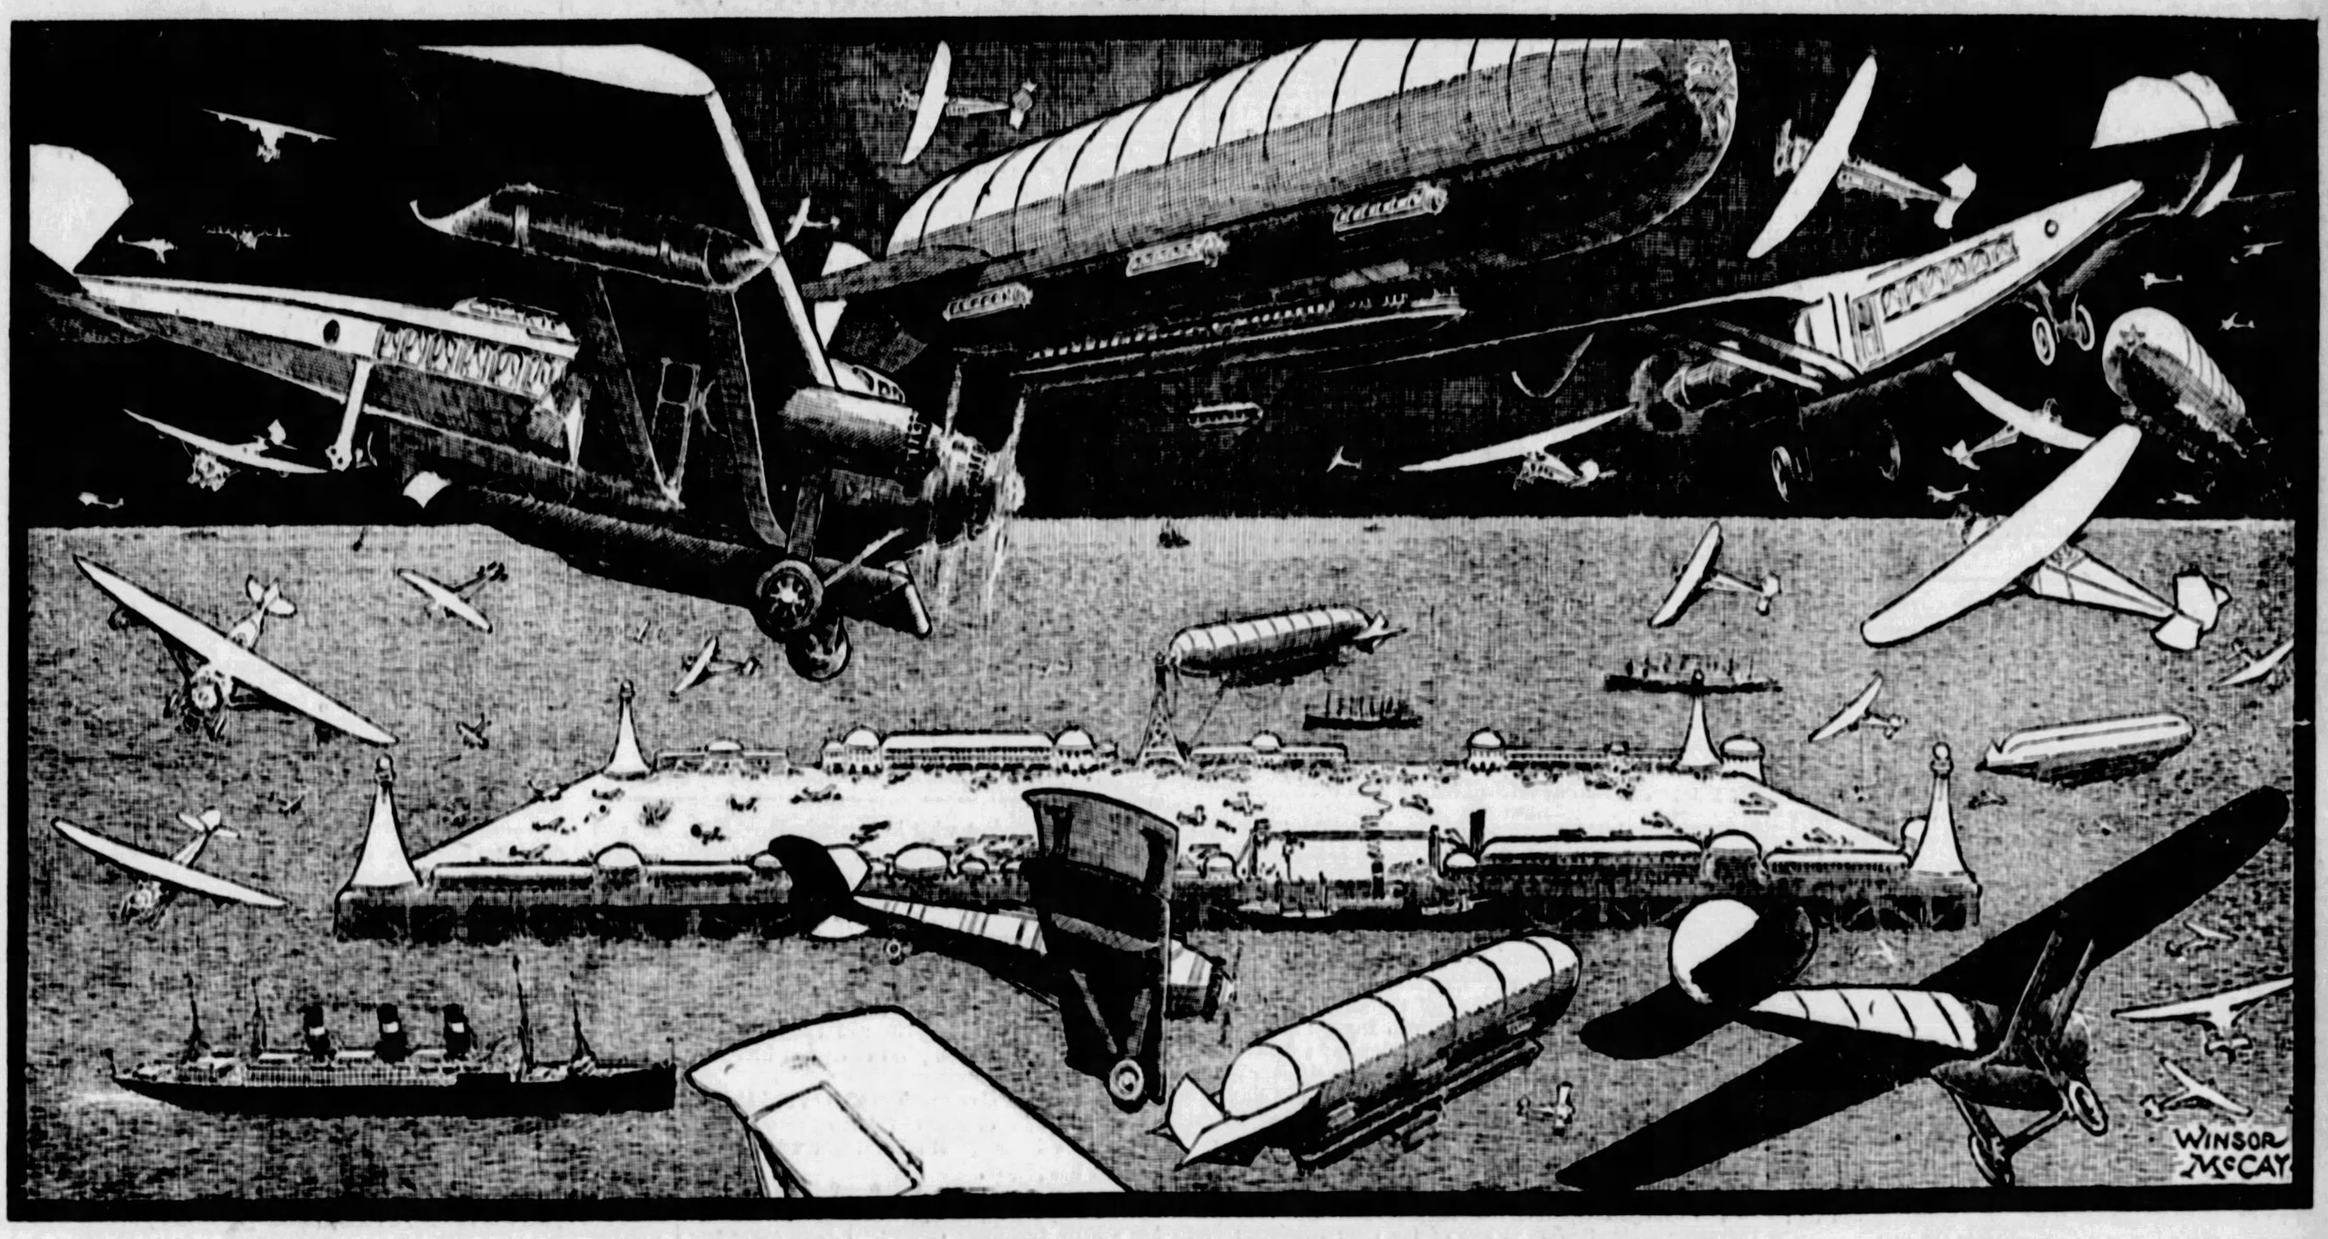
THE OCEAN AIR FERRY

Copyright, 1928.



This picture illustrates Mr. McCay's idea of an airship ferry that before many years will be carrying passengers across the Atlantic Ocean in a few hours.

The arrangement will not be EXACTLY like this. There will be no need of any landing place, for instance. In ten years the Atlantic will be a simple "hop" for powerful airships, as simple and easy as the English channel is now.

To believe that airships will one day go around the world without stopping is difficult for many.

It was difficult once to believe that the locomotive would really work. Many that first used it thought the telephone was a trick.

But, WHAT MEN CAN IMAGINE THEY CAN DO.

And the day is near when only heavy freight will travel on the water's surface. Passengers will go by air.

A FEW years ago men laughed at the idea of flying. Some that laughed are flying now.

The next great step will soon be a reality, passengers will fly from continent to continent, from America to Europe, from Europe to Asia, across all the oceans and seas of the earth.

Before this century shall have gone to join other centuries of the past, the transoceanic flying machine will be as much a matter of course as the automobile is now.

In a letter accompanying this picture, Mr. McCay writes:

"This picture of a transatlantic ferry, showing a landing place for airplanes in the middle of the ocean, is made by me not to show exactly how the thing will be, but to arouse interest and STIMULATE THE IMAGINATION.

"Young people THINKING about flying today will be PERFECTING FLYING in a few years. The dreams and imaginations of youth are the accomplishments of manhood.

"I have crowded into this picture the various types of flying machines as they actually exist and as engineers plan them. I include the suggested landing place in mid-ocean, where ships might alight to take on fuel, make repairs, or for other purposes.

"It is pleasing to think of feeble man building a great airplane empire out in the waste of ocean waters. Lighthouses at the four corners, landing docks for steamships bringing fuel, a mast at which dirigibles could be anchored, and a hotel for those that choose to wait a while and get some REAL deep-sea fishing.

"Such are a few of the features reasonably planned and easily developed, if men choose to take the trouble.

"The main thing is that in a few years crossing the ocean by airships will be as simple an undertaking as crossing a river by ferryboat today, and actually SAFER. I suggest that young people concentrate their minds on flying, which will offer a great field of enterprise, useful work and profit in the coming years."

It is difficult to realize that only a few years ago the late Lord Northcliffe was offering a prize of $50,000 to anybody that would fly across the English Channel. A Frenchman won the prize. Lord Northcliffe had wisely insured himself against being obliged to pay it, and Lloyds Insurance Company paid the $50,000. Since then Gertrude Ederle has SWUM across the same channel. And today there are French and British airship lines flying regularly between Paris and London, and patronized by Americans more than by any other nationality.

It takes but little imagination and confidence in the genius of mankind to realize that Mr. McCay's picture of the transoceanic ferry will soon be a reality. The high school boys and girls of today, and their fathers and mothers, also, will fly from America to Europe on airships absolutely safe, making the journey comfortably between sunrise and sunset.

It is not a matter of fantastic guesswork, but of scientific engineering calculations.

German and British builders are competing with each other now as to which shall first transport passengers across the ocean by air. The ships for the purpose are actually being built.

Edsel Ford, whose father, Henry Ford, is already building three-engine monoplanes made entirely of metal, has expressed to a Georgia newspaper his complete confidence in the feasibility of transatlantic airship travel.

The Fords, father and son, certainly understand mechanical problems.

Henry Ford, more than a year ago, told the writer of this article that as soon as he had disposed of some other problems he would devote attention to the construction of an all-metal, super airplane with many engines, a machine shop on board, and power sufficient to carry 100 passengers. Such a machine, Mr. Ford thought, would cost about $1,000,000.

In his Georgia interview, Edsel Ford is quoted as saying that the first transatlantic airship probably would be a dirigible, not a heavier than air machine. He pointed out that the speed of a heavier than air machine decreases as its size increases, whereas the speed of a dirigible INCREASES with its size.

Britain is already building a dirigible more than twice the size of our gigantic airship, the Shenandoah.

The Ford idea would be to make the dirigible lighter than air, entirely of metal. A dirigible of the light metal duralumin, a combination of aluminum, copper and other metal, would actually weigh less than one of the huge bags of silk divided into many compartments. And the metal dirigible would be fireproof, no danger of leakage or explosion, so that the more efficient and less expensive hydrogen gas could be used instead of non-explosive helium, costly and difficult to obtain.

It is fascinating, especially to the young mind, to think of travel in the future. Travelers bound for Europe will step into the compartment of an airship, carrying a suit case, enough for a week or two in Europe. They will lunch and dine on board, and land the evening of the same day in France, Germany, Italy or Spain.

Arrived in Europe swift airplanes will carry them in a few hours to old Constantinople, or the Bosphorus, or up north where the sun shines at midnight, or across the Mediterranean to the last fighting grounds of the Arabs that once in the name of Mohammed ruled nearly all of Europe.

In a few years you will hear Americans say, "we are going to Europe next week, returning in ten days," as they say now that they are going to the seashore or mountains for the week-end.

A landing place for airplanes in mid-ocean has been discussed, but it may never be built. The "little hop" across the Atlantic, requiring a few hours only, will be simple with perfected flying ships.

Captain Rickenbacker, a young man barely forty, greatest American fighter that ever went up in the air to bring down enemy ships, said the other day at a luncheon in Los Angeles given to officers of the General Motors Company:

"I have no doubt that some day great airships, miles above the earth, will sail around the world continuously, not coming down for years at a time.

"Passengers will be landed in smaller air boats, as steamers going to Liverpool used to land their passengers on tugs. Fuel and cargo will be taken on from smaller air boats, as big ships now take on coal. I have flown all over the country, and with a good machine and a good pilot flying is perfectly safe."

Captain Rickenbacker said nothing about the flying that he did when he was in the American army in Europe. In those days, when Rickenbacker went up in the air he knew that the chances were about even against his coming down alive. His extraordinary daring, marvelous skill as a flier, and the fact that the war ended when it did, explains why it is that he still lives.

Twenty-six times he brought down an enemy airplane, working his machine gun as he steered his plane. That beats all records of American fighting fliers.

Utterly indifferent to death, Rickenbacker would not have survived except that the war ended. Then there was no more fighting to do.

What Captain Rickenbacker and others FORESEE, American engineers and builders will DO. The whole world will be accessible. Men will go to Europe in less than one-tenth the time it took them to go from New York to Buffalo early in the last century. DISTANCE WILL BE ANNIHILATED. A trip around the world, through the air, will be a part of the education of high school children.

You that read this will cross the Atlantic through the air, sleeping one night here at home and the next night in London, Paris or Berlin. And a little later it will be hard to realize that men ever crossed the ocean in any other way.

How amazed men were twenty-odd years ago when they first saw automobiles running. How amazed a child would be now if a stage coach or horse and buggy drove up to the door. We change quickly and easily adapt ourselves to new wonders.

This picture will become a reality, the flying machine will not only make men happier, save time, conquer distance. It will also end war by making it too dangerous.

Kings, princes and nobles lost their love of fighting in armor when powder and shot came along.

Gigantically rich nations will lose their taste for war when they realize that the airship means instantaneous wiping out of their cities, their factories, all their wealth, and probably their own lives as well.

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY by O. O. McIntyre

Everybody Swing Their Partners! Grand Change.

BOOK CRITICS do not pay much attention to E. Phillips Oppenheim, yet I am told he has one of the largest audiences in America. Mr. Oppenheim puts more importance on his plot than in the writing of it. His stories have about the same formula—a beautiful Cinderella girl, the villain, the clean living hero against a background of international intrigue swinging from Paris to London and Monte Carlo. His chief aim is to amuse with thrilling adventure, and evidently his readers never tire of the mixture. He wrote one mystery story that was a masterpiece of ingenuity about 10 years ago, called "The Great Impersonation." He lives mostly at Monte Carlo, dictates his stories to a stenographer, and is about the most prolific writer in the world.

This, incidentally, is being written at Monte Carlo on the day a Paris paper announces, unofficially, the engagement of the Prince of Monaco to a noted New York woman. I rather hope it isn't true. Being the ruler of the smallest principality in the world sounds romantic, but the ruler is in reality just a gambling house proprietor.

Passion for Gambling

I have often wondered about the consuming passion for gambling. It grips human being like the worst habit-forming drug, and is just as destructive to character. The confirmed gambler is invariably a liar. If I had a son who had to choose between gambling and liquor, I would prefer him to choose liquor. The drunkard is reclaimed often, but the gambler rarely. He is stripped of the finer emotions. He trusts no one and he will double-cross his best friend. A celebrated New York gambler who won the sobriquet of "Honest" Soandso, once declared: "There are no honest gamblers." He was not speaking of the man who plays an occasional game of poker, bets on the horses or takes a flyer in the market, but the one who makes gambling a business. I think he was right.

A letter comes to me reading: "Why is it that when a man tries to buy a first-class ticket at a new York theater box office he is treated so discourteously?" Because the box office man regards you as a sap. He thinks you should know all the first-class seats are in the hands of the speculators.

And what promised to be the biggest season in theatrical history has turned out to be a first-class theatrical slump. Some forty theaters went dark in a week. The Rialto for the first time in its history had too many hits. The ordinary show had no chance whatever. They had to be good or close. It was an excellent lesson for producers. They learned that money can be made if you give the people the best.

The Pest and the Actor

At the Lambs one night recently an actor was in his cups over a heavy loss in the market. He was playing billiards and swigging deeply from a flask between shots. One of those talkative young men who is always a pest at the club sat on the sidelines and finally, approaching the actor, said: "You've had a tough break. Will a hundred help you?" He peeled off the amount from a thick rool. The actor pocketed it, mumbled his thanks and continued his game.

But he continued to bemoan his misfortune. The young man came to the rescue with two more hundred-dollar bills, handing them over in a grandiose way, so all could see. At length the actor, too wobbly to stand, put up his cue to depart. In the hallway his benefactor collared him and said: "You remember, of course, that I gave you three one hundred dollar bills. This is just to remind you so you won't forget."

"Yeah, I remember," drawled the actor, "but I don't like you yet." And he lurched out.

The sandwich shops—they are opening by the dozen—are offering hilarity with their fare. One has a reader who reads amusing poems, another has a buck and wing dancer, still another an accordeon player.

"The Flea Circus" Attracts

Aaron Reuben was the first of the sandwich glorifiers, and the midnight cry of "Let's go to Reuben's!" has become a part of New Yorkese. Mr. Reuben had a delicatessen shop on upper Broadway and fitted up a small room in the rear for special sandwiches. The idea took on, and now the sandwich parlor occupies two large rooms with an additional large shop on Madison avenue. Some of his sandwiches sell for 90 cents a copy, but they provide a full meal, being built in sections. He was first to name sandwiches after celebrities and, of course, they brought friends to show their names on the menu. Mr. Reuben is one of the most consistent first nighters, occupying a first row chair and dressed in the latest in full dress garments. He is enormously rich, showing what may be done with the lowly sandwich and an idea.

It seems to me it is possible to dignify anything in New York. "The Flea Circus" on Forty-second street, for instance, is attended by smart crowds after the theater.

A young man in Pittsburgh postcards: "I am coming to New York on my honeymoon. What clothes should I bring for a week's visit? I do not want to look like a farmer."

Without intending to hurt the young man's feelings, I suggest he bring just what he wears in Pittsburgh. He will probably not be noticed anyway. And as for looking like a farmer, after years of viewing city slickers I am beginning to want to look like a perfect Rube.

In Europe more than a dozen cadgers will accost you on a few weeks' stay. They are chiefly young men untrussed by drink. I have not run across a young man in America ruined by drink for some time. And that rather convinces me American prohibition is an important moral issue. Although I would like to have a good cold glass of regular beer now and then, just the same.

Two popular players—Lon Chaney and Helen Mencken—are the offspring of deaf and dumb parents. I am also told Mr. Chaney has a spinal ailment as the result of the twisted roles he has played.

Variety reports every New York newspaper but one now has a daily Broadway column. Fifteen years ago I was the lone crusader in Broadway columning. Every managing editor upon whose doorsteps I camped—and that means all of them—patted me on the shoulder, moved me toward the door, and said I had a good idea, but it wasn't feasible, and whispered to the office boy not to admit me the next time I called. I didn't stick to the idea through any quixotic devotion to an ideal. The fact is I had about failed at everything else. It was this or, I guess, the river. Anyway the idea has given a lot of crack newspapermen good jobs, and now many of them devote a part of their space to panning me. An odd world, my masters.

SIDEWALKS of PITTSBURGH by Havey Boyle

Oratory Has Fallen Into Decline in Recent Years.

PORTRAIT of an orator from an old notebook on Pittsburgh: "In the campaign of 1876 between Hays and Tilden Pittsburgh did not go empty-handed so far as oratory was concerned. Old City Hall was the place where the campaign issues were discussed. Jim Blaine appeared in this hall as did also Carl Schurz.

It was in that year I listened to one who perhaps was the best orator in the world. He was a well-formed man with a smoothly-shaved, handsome face. He outshone anyone who ever appeared here. For two hours he riveted 4,000 persons to the floor. The orator walked to and fro like a eager lion. His oratory was like a full, flowing river that sweeps everything before it. He spoke with clenched fists. The Greeks likened rhetoric to the open hand and logic to the clenched fist. Col. Robert Ingersoll, the orator I speak of, pounded in his logic with the clenched fist. Ingersoll that night in Pittsburgh treated his audience to a few aphorisms: "But, my friends, the Democrats say: 'Let us in and we will do better next time.' Ah, but my friend's character rests on a record and not on a prospectus." And again: "He who holds a council of his brain without inviting his heart to be present comes to the conclusion of a rascal." In pronunciating, Ingersoll was the equal of Forrest, Booth, John McCullough, Lawrence Barrett, or Charles Dillon, the English actor, who was one of the best King Lears I ever saw.

ORATORY, here and elsewhere, has fallen into decline since those days of long ago when Pittsburgh, not so big, heard in the political campaigns some of the finest speakers of the nation. There are still a few spell-binders, but the extensive use of the radio has robbed the platform of great figures who denounced the opposition in ringing terms and praised their side in velvety tones.

Banquets now furnish the vehicle for the popping off sessions, but speakers have learned that banqueteers grow restless after a short time and consquently the speeches are reduced to a minimum.

BARBERS came into their own when the ladies began bobbing. Whether the bob remains or goes away ladies have got the habit of going to a shop for a hairdress. Some of the barbers who work in shops for men devote their spare time at home or making calls attending to the bobs and waves of ladies. In some of the shops for women here there is a rule against tipping. And it is live up to. Women are far more sensible in the matter of tipping than men. They are not tight, but they have a better idea of value, coming from an inborn trait for shopping for bargains.

CLERKS in stores will tell you that a man customer feels embarrassed if he walks out without buying anything. In fact, often a man will purchase something he is not satisfied with just to escape walking out empty-handed. Women, of course, are not so foolish. They'll visit 18 shops until they strike just what they want.

THERE is co-operation to provide the best service for shoppers. Stores in Pittsburgh have their own corps of shoppers who visit competitors, getting prices and examining goods. This was done a long while ago somewhat covertly, but now a shopper from Mr. A's store will visit Mr. B's store without any attention at deception. In fact, the store shoppers are known to one another and to all the stores. It was found, a store executive tells us, that this method helps all stores and helps the customer.

BABY'S BATH

Articles needed: Water, tub, pan scraper, two chisels, and an ax.

Use good soap, for it is cheaper to buy good soap than new babies. And takes less time. Soapologists are now working on a combination soap that floats, keeps that schoolgirl complexion, prevents babies from shrinking, cures mange, and has a peppermint flavor. They claim it contains an alkaline solution of potassium salts but it's all lyes.

Bathe the baby fifty-two times a year. If you think that is too often, bathe him once a week.

Important! Do not use a washing machine—it may become seriously damaged.

A cake of ice thrown into the water in the winter will cause your baby to become a two-fisted, red-blooded he-man with hair on his chest—providing it's that kind of a baby.

Throw baby into the tub and when he hits bottom you know he hits bottom. Make sure his head is above water.

Rub with scouring powder, take out of tub, dry, shine with a chamois, and sprinkle with gun powder.

Mothers, be sure to save baby's first ring!

Follow the directions I have given and baby's bath will be a howling success.

ROPING THE NEWS by Will Rogers

Will Proposes Course In Testifying for Public Men

WELL, all I know is just what I read in the papers. All we have been able to read here lately is about somebody testifying before somebody elses Committe, and I have been reading the testimony. They have called everybody but Calvin in this oil investigation. It started out as Oil, and now it has wound up as a bond investigation. Instead of carrying around buckets of oil, why everybody was being handed bundles of Liberty Bonds.

It seems they slipped Mellon fifty thousand of them, and he let 'em lay around a couple of days before he even noticed 'em. Fifty thousand being discovered unexpectedly by him would be just like our eyes unexpectedly lighting on a new shiny Penny, that someone had dropped. He did go to the trouble of sending them back to Bill Hays, and told Bill that he would give $50,000 but not of somebody elses money.

They asked Butler, the new Chairman of the Republican Party, if he got any of the bonds. He replied with much regret and sadness that he had not. I would have liked to have seen 'em give Butler some. I believe they would have stayed put.

Courses in Testifying

Mellon told them on the stand that he had trouble enough with his own money without worrying about Sinclair's.

But all that is not what I want to talk to you about. I have an idea that I want to lay before you. Everybody is offering suggestions as to how to improve education. We are learning them all kind of courses. We have courses in Business administration, salesmanship, Public speaking, Etiquette, Banking, Dairying, Fertilizing, Everything that a person can think of we have a course in it that you can take at some College. Now what I want to propose is a course in "Public Testifying."

Most of our public men spend over half their time testifying on the stand, especially the Republicans. Now what has brought forth this idea of mine is the testimony that has been delivered on the stand. Did you ever in your life see men get as flustrated and tangled up as these fellows do on the stand? It looks like the smarter the man the bigger Sucker he is when he is being questioned. You know the greatest testimony in any case and about the only convincing testimony we have, is some Childs testimony, or some old ignorant Farmer or Laborer. They are the ones that always make the hit on the stand. They can answer every question without flinching, and in a simple direct way. But the minute a witness has had any education, or thinks he knows, something, why the less convincing he is on the stand.

Lawyers Worst Witnesses

I think of all the bunch on the witness stand that lawyers are the worst. You never read a Lawyers testimony on the stand in any case in your life and could tell heads or tails of it. They think they are so smart that they have to hide something, and they are generally more scared than any other class of witness there is. The reason the child, or old Lady, or ignorant workman make such good witnesses is they only have one story, and the prosecuting Lawyer knows they only have one, so there is no chance of tying them up in cross-examinations. But the smart fellow has so many different angles that he is trying to use a little of all of them, and winds up by making everybody believe that he dident tell half he knew, and dident know half he told.

So I am going to start a school of "Public Testimony." Instead of being layed out like a Schoool it will be layed out like a Court. Instead of teachers we will have 'em made up as Sherriffs, and Baileffs and Jurymen, and Judges. The minute a man is elected to office like Senator or Congressman, why we will have him come and spend a few weeks in the school and then when he goes on to his public office he will be all set for the first investigation. We will teach 'em to be nervous, not to let the other fellow get em rattled, and have 'em all trained to tell where they got every dollar they used in their campaign and how much they paid for each vote.

Has Patriotic Reasons

You see if they would keep all that straight, its just like the income tax, its merely a matter of records. If you can show the Committe where you received so much and spent so much and they both come out even, you need have no fear on the stand. So that's what my school will teach. In other words it will persuade our big men to turn honest after elections and trust to the mercy of the Jury. And we will coach 'em to tell everything the first time. That will save having to spend your life on the stand. Even if it takes a little longer the first time you testify, why it will save time in the long run. If it takes a whole day to tell the thing, why my school will instruct you to go through with it. In other words, we are going to try and instil honesty into our Pupils, and get them to get used to telling nothing but what happened, and all that did happen.

Of course when some of my early pupils first start testifying they wont be believed. It will be such a radical change from the usual testimony that the Committe will think that it is a clever fake. But as they grow used to my pupils they will begin to realize that they can depend on them. Its really patriotic reasons that make me want to do this. For I am afraid that foreign Nations will read some of our papers and find the testimony of some of our men who are in the Cabinet and high in public office, and they will Judge them by that testimony. Well that will leave a bad impression, and if I can change that and get them to make their testimonys as smart as the men really are, why then I will have performed a Public service.

I think I will open the School at Claremore, Oklahoma. Thats about the hub of everything. In fact I will do a little local State work there just to practice getting politicians to testify correctly. I am going to have Jim Reed as my Prosecuting Attorney, and Senator Walsh as my Judge, and after you have gone through a course facing them, why you will never have to fear any other Investigation that you may be called on to face. Remember it opens next year, "Will Rogers School of Public Testifying, at Claremore, Oklahoma, after one term in my school you will welcome testifying, instead of fearing it."

ARTIE by George Ade

ARTIE NEEDS A BANKROLL—Shall He Train With a Political Grafter to Get It?

THE STORY SO FAR:

Artie Blanchard is a young office worker with a great side talent for wise cracking. Each week he relates to his fellow white collar slaves, Miller and Hall, the latest sensational developments in his own private life. So far, Artie has related with gusto his success at a church social and a very conservative poker party. Soon after he tells the boys of his meeting a new sweetheart, Mamie, and his subsequent Lothario-like conquests, Artie confesses that he and Mamie have quarreled owing to excessive jealousy on Artie's part. Soon after the rift in the lute, however, Artie accidentally meets Mamie and diplomatically re-establishes himself in her good graces. It looks like they are in love with each other.

CHAPTER XII.

AFTER a hurried luncheon at one of the places where patrons help themselves, Miller and Artie took a walk on the sunny side of the street.

Artie was not as talkative as usual, and, as Miller seldom did more than encourage a conversation once started, the two sauntered for several minutes in silence.

Then Artie spoke abruptly. "Miller," said he, "I got a hen on."

"What is it?"

"It's like this. Would you dally with politics if you thought you stood to win some easy jack?"

"That depends. You're not going into politics, are you?"

"They've got me entered, but I don't know whether I'll start or not. I'm leary of it; I don't mind tellin' you those."

"What do you mean?"

"Well, mebbe you don't understand. I don't like to feature myself, but in that precinct where I hang out I'm purty strong. I'm a good mixer and I've kind o' got next to the live ones, and if I do say it myself I think there's a lot of the boys that'd vote my way if I went after 'em hard. Do you know Jim Landon?"

"Who is he?"

"He's the heavy boss in our ward, or any way he used to be. He's one o' the aldermen, and he's out for it again, bu, good and scared that he can't win. He come to me last night at Hoover's cigar store and give me a big talk. What he wants is for me to come to the front for him strong. He knows I've got a drag in my precinct, and he says if I'll jump in and do what I can for him he'll see that I got a good job in the hall, where I can cop out about twice what I'm gettin' now. Of course I'm out for the important sugar—but I don't know about this deal."

"Does he stand a good chance of being elected?"

"That's what keeps me guessin'. Four years ago he win in a walk, but this time he had to do all kinds o' funny work to win the primary. There's a lot o' people in the ward that's knockin' him all they can."

"What's the matter with him, anyway?"

"Oh, they kind o' think he's done too well. Four years ago he was on his uppers and now he's got money to burn. There's some o' them guys out in our ward can't make out how it is that Jimmy can afford to buy big apartment buildings when his salary wouldn't hardly pay a janitor of one. They say they can't stand for that kind o' work, and so there's a lot o' them people that boosted him two years ago that's out now to slough him. They've put up a new guy against him and he's makin' a nasty fight."

"I don't understand yet what they've got against your man."

"W'y, they're crazy at him. You see four years ago he made the play that if they put him in he was goin' down to the City Hall and change the whole works. He was goin' to clean the streets and jack up the coppers and build some more school houses. Jimmy says to 'em: 'Throw things my way and I'll see that everything's on the level.' This talk was so good it went.

"Well, you know what happened to Jimmy when he got down there with those high-binders and begin to see easy money. He hadn't been in on the whack-up six weeks till he bought a bus that looked like the bridal suite on the Leviathan and sat at the City Hall waitin' for the easy marks to come along and throw up their hands."

"I see. He turned out to be a grafter, eh?"

"I don't see no way o' gettin' past it. I like Jimmy. He's one o' them boys that never has cold feet and there's nothin' too good for a friend, but I guess when it comes to doin' a nice, genteel knock-off he belongs with the smoothest of 'em. And he learned it so quick, too. Ooh!"

"Artie, that kind of a man is a thief and that's all you can make out of it," said Miller, with severity.

"Mebbe that ain't no lie, neither. He wouldn't go out with a rod or do any o' that strongarm work, but if Jimmy saw a guy puttin' dough into his pocket he wouldn't let on. You wouldn't have to feed him no knockout drops to make him take the coin, I guess.

"But the nerve o' the boy! He won't never let on that he's handled any crooked money. When he was staked to the office he didn't have a thin dime except what was tied up in a bum little grocery store. Now he's got too strong to tend store and his brother-in-law's runnin' it. He don't do a thing in the world except travel around with some more o' them heady boys and lay for jackpots.

"And the talk he gives you! Baby. He's better 'n any shell-worker I ever saw. W'y, he can set down and show you dead easy that he done all that funny votin' because it was a good thing for the workin' boys. Sure! That's why he wants to stay in, too—so as the taxpayers won't get the short end of it. On the square, if I had his nerve I'd start out sellin' oil heaters in Brazil."

"You don't mean to say that he has any chance of being elected again?"

"Oh, he's got a chance all right. He'll have some of the bootleggers and beer runners rootin' for him, and this place he's holdin' out pays good money."

"Yes, and even if you got it you'd be out again in a few years and worse off than ever. Besides, I wouldn't help elect a man who sold his influence." Miller spoke with considerable feeling.

"As for that," resumed Artie, "you needn't think I like Jim Landon's way o' gettin' coin. It's just like this, though. He's gone out of his way two or three times to do things for me and, of course, them things count. Everybody's shakin' him down this spring, and if he gets the gaff he'll be flat on his back. If I didn't know him I'd be against him hard. But you don't like to throw down a man that's treated you right, do you?"

"I've never been in politics, but I should say that no young man could have any excuse for voting for a grafter."

"Say, now, listen. It comes election day, see? I go in the place and vote for the stranger. Then I come out and meet Jimmy. He puts out the hand and I go and get a cigar with him and do the friendship act. Wouldn't that be purty course work?"

"It wouldn't be any worse than his promising to be honest and then turning out a crook," said Miller.

"Well, I guess I'll pass up the whole thing. Come to size it up, for a man that don't want to be a rum hound, it's too much like work. I didn't think you'd O. K. the scheme. I'll just tell Jimmy that I'm out of it. That's an awful wise move, too. I guess an easier way to get that roll 'd be to borrow a nice kit o' tools and go 'round blowin' safes."

Mutter and Mumble

In "DENTAL DEMONS"

By JOHN P. MEDBURY

MUTTER—Well, well, Mr. Mumble, you appear to be in pain.

Mumble—Yes, I'm suffering with my face.

Mutter—I don't blame you; if I had your face I'd sufffer too.

Mumble—I'm exhausted, I walked the floor all night with my teeth.

Mutter—You're foolish, you ought to get yourself a bicycle.

Mumble—That wouldn't do any good.

Mutter—What's the matter, can't you ride a bicycle?

Mumble—Sure, but my teeth can't.

Mutter—Why don't you go to a dentist?

Mumble—I did, but he pulled the wrong ones.

Mutter—You should have told him about it.

Mumble—I couldn't, he had his hand in my mouth.

Mutter—I thought you had a couple of bridges.

Mumble—I have.

Mutter—Did they cause you much trouble when they were new?

Mumble—Yes, I couldn't eat any meat for six months.

Mutter—Why not

Mumble—The butcher wouldn't give me any more credit.

Mutter—You mean you were broke?

Mumble—Yes, I only had three hundred dollars and it was a question of settling with the butcher or paying the dentist.

Mutter—So what did you do?

Mumble—I bought an automobile.

Mutter—I've got to do something for my teeth, they're making me crazy.

Mumble—Is that so, I thought you inherited your mental condition.

Mutter—What would uppers and lowers cost me?

Mumble—I don't know, you'll have to ask the Pullman Company.

Mutter—What are your teeth worth?

Mumble—Thirty-five dollars.

Mutter—That's a fair price.

Mumble—Sure, but the dentist insisted upon charging me two hundred and fifty.

Mutter—How long ago did you have the work done?

Mumble—Six years.

Mutter—You should never have paid that much money.

Mumble—I'm not going to.

Mutter—Why does he charge such big prices?

Mumble—He's got a good looking nurse.

Mutter—I think I ought to get a bridge, is that kind of work very disagreeable?

Mumble—Yes, you have to pay him in advance?

Mutter—I thought you got yours on credit?

Mumble—I did, but I gave Calvin Coolidge and John D. Rockefeller as reference.

Mutter—You're crazy, they don't know you.

Mumble—Of course not, so how could they say anything against me?

Mutter—Good teeth are the secret of long life, and I've got to live.

Mumble—Is that so, what for?

Mutter—Wouldn't you like to be a centenarian?

Mumble—No. That's all right for an old man, but not for a young fellow.

Mutter—My ambition is to live to a hundred.

Mumble—That's silly, look how long it will take you.

Mutter—Don't you believe in numerology?

Mumble—Sure, I'm one of the 4 out of 5.

Mutter—that comes from neglect. Take my wife for instance, she has the teeth of a 16-year-old girl.

Mumble—You ought to make her return them.

Mutter—She's going on 33 and hasn't lost a tooth.

Mumble—She probably remembers where she leaves them.

Mutter—You'll never find her in a dentist's chair.

Mumble—That's all right, I wasn't going to look, anyway.

Mutter—Does you wife suffer with her teeth?

Mumble—Certainly, whose teeth do you think she suffers with?

Mutter—Is she getting a plate made?

Mumble—No, the doctor says she ought to have a draw-bridge.

Mutter—A draw-bridge?

Mumble—Yes, she opens her mouth so often.

Mutter—Has he started on the work yet?

Mumble—Sure, she's already had ten extractions.

Mutter—That's terrible, why did he have to pull so many?

Mumble—To keep her from losing them.

Mutter—Can't he save her teeth?

Mumble—I guess so.

Mutter—You guess so?

Mumble—Yes, he'll probably save them for a couple of months and then throw them away.

One Girl to Another by Lloyd Mayer

Sandie Is All Agog About a Sea Hop

"MY DEAR, I'm aBRIM with WIM, WIGor and wITALity at this point—I ACtually Am, because I've suddenly conceived the most SCINtillalting iDEA! You see I met the most FAScinating MAN at a PARty the other night, my dear, who is a TERribly famous AViator and he got me all exCIted about this FLYing situation, my dear, because I mean he said he was looking for an attractive GIRL who would make a transatlantic HOP with him or something—can you BEAR it, my dear?

"Well, ANYways, I was simply THRILLED to DEATH about it, because he said I was the FIRST girl he had MET who was the TYPE who would make a succESS of FLYing, my dear, and he said if I would start PRACticing with him and learn how to sort of PLY one of these odd AERoplane effects it would be a CINCH to sort of get somebody to casually hand us over TWENTY-five thousand DOLlars or some such trifling sum to BACK the FLIGHT and, my dear, I would turn SOMersaults in WESTminster ABbey for HALF that amount, do you know what I mean?

"BUT don't you REALly think it's a simply MARvelous opporTUnity for me to really become Famous if I take him Up on this propoSItion? Because I mean when a GIRL decides to make one of these trans-Atlantic HOPS or something simply EVRYbody goes perfectly WILD about her especially if she's atTRACtive or anything.

"All you have to DO is to sort of anNOUNCE you are going to HOP somewheres in a sort of VAGUE WAY and you imMEdiately get the most treMENdous amount of pubLIcity and have your PICture in the PApers and everything sort of POsing in a little light RAIment with your Pilot and I mean if you are really quite an atTRACtive girl everybody is FAR more int'rested in WHAT you take off than WHEN, do you know what I mean?

"F'r instance, HEAPS of these odd women who have LOUDly anNOUNCED they were going to suddenly hop OFF for somewheres in a pair of snappy looking KNICKERS with somebody else's HUSband haven't ACtually LEFT the GROUND, my dear, but the minute you SAY you're GOing you imMEdiately have a lot of odd souls deSCENDing on you with the most saLUBrious OFfers to appear in VAUDEville at about a THOUsand dollars a DAY or something and some STEAMship company starts FRANtically urging you to BARGE over to PARis at their exPENSE so Marshal FOCH or the PRESident or somebody can KISS you and give you a large-sized CROIX de GUERRE, do you know what I mean?

"WELL, ANYways, my dear, I'm ACtually WHIFFing and BURBling with JOY at the PROSpect of REALly doing something exCIting and I think I'm TERribly LUCky to have this AViator sort of PICK me OUT to HOP somewheres with him, because, my dear, he's really FRIGHTfully good-LOOKing and the TYPE you'l feel PERfectly SAFE in sort of DOing anything like that with, because I mean he isn't the least BIT flirTAtious or anything, my dear.

"I think that's ONE thing you have to be awfully sort of CAREful about because I mean it would be TERribly dangerous to sort of fly VAGUEly hither and YON with somebody who would make VIolent LOVE to you in an AERoplane, because I mean it would be FAtal to your REP if your Pilot was the type who got FRESH, do you know what I mean?

"But I'm honestly all aGOG over the PROSpect of making this FLIGHT with this boy, my dear, because he's really AWfully SWEET and he was actually TOO imPRESSED when I told him I was simply WILD about the IDEA and would start right IN learning how to be an AViatrix, only of course I haven't said a WORD to MOTHer about it because of COURSE, my dear, she'd PRACticably ROLL over and BUTter herself with disMAY at the idea but I don't see any reason in the WORLD why I shouldn't go right aHEAD and become FAmous because it is about TIME that a girl of my CHARacter and IDEALS and all should sort of DO something to exPRESS her personALity instead of just sort of SITting, do you know what I mean?

"AND I am ACtually beginning to be awfully sort of fed UP on this ART course, my dear, because it's TERribly DREAR and rePELlent the way they make you STUdy all the entire time in it. I mean one or two of these ARtists' BALL effects I have been to have been rather inTRIguing but on the WHOLE I HONestly haven't got much OUT of it because it isn't NEARly as exCITing as I thought it WOULD be, my dear, because practically NONE of the TEACHers are at ALL atTRACtive-looking and the GIRLS in the class are SIMply AWful—you know the TYPE!

"So I think that for a girl with an ACtive MIND, sort of, something like aviation has LOADS more TO it than ART because you can sort of RISE to greater HEIGHTS or something and make HEAPS more MONey, do you know what I mean?

"WELL, my dear, I MUST be GOing at this point because I'm meeting that AViator youth for TEA because we have LOADS to sort of disCUSS about our FLIGHT and all because, f'r instance, I simply CAN'T make up my MIND whether to wear KNICKers or a terribly alluring SPORT skirt and I sort of want him to HELP me to deCIDE which is the more beCOMing, my dear—I mean I ACtually DO!"

"But don't you REALLY think it's a simply MARvelous opporTUnity."

QUENNIE SMITH, stellar comedienne, and Charles Purcell, with a group of girls, who appear in "Hit the Deck," nautical musical comedy, as you might guess from Purcell's uniform. This piece of tunes and fun is scheduled for the Nixon, opening Monday.

LOTTICE HOWELL and some of her friends of "My Maryland," Alvin attraction for the week beginning Monday. The operetta returns to be played by the same company that appeared in the Alvin in November, when it made a run of four weeks.

Returning Operetta And Musical Comedy Offerings of Stage

"Hit the Deck" Brings Something New; "My Maryland," Some Old Friends.

By WILLIAM J. LEWIS.

WITH "My Maryland" returning to the Alvin and the Pitt closed for the season, awaiting the date when the George Sharp Production Stock Company begins its second summer season in that house, said date being April 9, "Hit the Deck," coming to the Nixon Monday night, sums up the total of things new on the legitimate stage, overlooking the fact that neither operetta nor musical comedy can be called "legitimate" legitimately, tradition having it that nothing but the dear old drammer itself can be classed as legit.

"Hit the Deck" is interpreted by a company that includes Queenie Smith, upon whose work we have cast approving eyes in the past, as well as Charles Purcell, player with much musical comedy experience. An interesting point regarding the play is that Vincent Youmans, young composer of the music it boasts, also is its producer. The story is by Herbert Fields. It has been successful elsewhere.

"My Maryland" comes back with the same company that appeared in the Alvin for four weeks in November—the same, barring a couple of minor changes. It includes all the principals then seen here—Lottice Howell, George Rymer, Betty Byron and Alexander Clark.

On the second visit, it is pertinent to state that that gentleman working "ahead" of the company also is the same—Frank McGrann, who became well acquainted with many Pittsburgh groups when the company was here before, and who now is introduced to the reading public of the theater for a purpose, the intention being to make use of him, turn him into "copy," as newspaper parlance has it. Mr. McGrann's position is what the public knows as a "press agent." Although the press agent's duties are many and his job, in a way, is administrative, the no particular thing he is supposed always to do is to get publicity for his company, and with editors as hard-boiled as they are and more wise to the ways of the press agent than they used to be—that is some job.

Old-fashioned tales, like the star's pools having been stolen, are now looked at askance by men who have become quite expert as askance lookers, so that we now have members of the Theatrical Press Representatives of America who resort to legitimate means of keeping their attractions or stars before the public. Perhaps you would like to read a sample. Well, from here on for a number of paragraphs Mr. McCrann is having his say.

"As you observe, the stalwarts who constitute the pride of Gen. Stonewall Jackson's army in 'My Maryland,' you may mark a gentleman who maneuvers a musket with the practiced facility of an old hand. If you do, the chances are that you are admiring a supernumerary known as William Wiggins.

"Mr. Wiggins is an exceptional—perhaps an unprecedented—phenomenon in the theater. He is a professional extra man. For months he followed 'My Maryland' around the country, begging at each stop to be enrolled among the soldier supers. He receives for this honorable labor $1 a performance.

"Very few people are able to keep traveling on an income of $8 to $10 a week, with a layoff Holy Week and the week before Christmas. Mr. Wiggins' secret is marvelously simple. He joined the 'My Maryland' company last fall in Detroit, one of the obscure jobless, searching surcease and cakes.

"The company moved to Buffalo. Mr. Wiggins, eager not to lose his $1 a day sinecure, got a job in the laundry room of a lake boat bound for Buffalo and was able to reach the assigned Buffalo theater in time for the Monday performance. From Buffalo he trailed the company to Pittsburgh last November, traveling hitch and hike, that is, by walking and begging rides on the highway.

"From Pittsburgh to Cincinnati, 'My Maryland's' next stop, he voyaged in relative comfort, having hidden himself in the baggage car carrying the show's scenery. From Cincinnati to Indianapolis and from Indianapolis to Columbus he stole or borrowed rides when he could and walked when walking was obligatory.

"When he arrived at the Columbus Theater, a worn veteran among the fresh supernumeraries then being assembled, the humane and sporting Mr. Tisdale, manager of the company, threw up his hands hopelessly and decided to make him a regular member of his organization, which meant that henceforth Mr. Wiggins' railroad fare was paid for him.

"Wiggins was a body polisher in a Detroit automobile factory. He sang in a cabaret quartet when Detroit was officially wet and there was, consequently, more demand for quartets. For five years he was in the Eighteenth United States Infantry. In the World War he was gassed twice and dished in the lungs by shrapnel. He has two citations.

"Can you spin, gentle reader, a more curious or ironic tale than this one of Mr. Wiggins, the soldier, who burns aching feet on stony highways to carry an imaginary musket in a fictional play for $1 a day?"

That story is so improbable that you just know it is true, for it is the true story that always is more strange than the fictional one. But let us dismiss it and proceed with the theater fare.

Comes to the Davis Trixie Friganza, comedienne and star of musical productions of other days, who also has been seen in the movies, and whose Keith-Albee vaudeville offering now is "My Bag o' Trix." She has traveled far into fame since she ran away from her Cincinnati home to go on the stage, where Delia O'Callhan became Trixie Friganza. On the Davis screen will be Olive Borden and Antonio Moreno in "Come to my House."

The Academy burlesque is presented under the title of "Pretty Babies," in which Peggy Mayo is the featured comedienne.

In the Harris, Aldine and Sheridan Square will be popular priced vaudeville and motion pictures. The Penn and Stanley offer feature photoplays and elaborate stage presentations.

SMILING

ELEANOR ARLINGTON'S smile is well known on the vaudeville stage. She is coming to the Sheridan Square.

SOLOIST

SONYA ROSSANA, soprano, will be heard with the Florentine Singers on the stage in the Stanley.

Film Stars To Be Heard Over Radio

SIX prominent United Artists stars and directors will be heard over the radio Thursday night. They will be broadcast at 9 o'clock, eastern standard time, over 35 stations allied with the National Broadcasting Company. Those to be heard are are Norma Talmadge, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, David Wark Griffith, John Barrymore and Dolores Del Rio.

Actors Demand A Tariff Wall Against Aliens

Miss Alden Gay Stirs a Tempest in the Theatrical Teapots.

By GEORGE SEIBEL.

OVERPRODUCTION is doing curious things to this world of ours, not only in the coal industry, but even among the chorus. Here is "Equity," the organ of the actors, with an editorial in awesome italics, demanding "Protection from Foreign Competition." This time it is not because our infant movie industry is being strangled by porch-climbers like Pola Negri and Emil Jannings—no, this time we have a legitimate grievance and are only seeking retaliation. The British Minister of Labor has refused to permit Miss Alden Gay to appear in a play over in dear old London. She was robbing British actors of their bread and butter and Brussels sprouts.

GEORGE SEIBEL

Miss Gay is a charming lady who combines the austere dignity of Longfellow's hero with the implications of merriment contained in her other name. She can have had no intentions of depriving any hard-working Tiller Girl of her daily provender, but the British Minister of Labor says she did. And that is the last word, just as when our Department of Justice reports that Mikhail Massenmordovitch came to America to overthrow our constitution and must be deported.

In February of this year 123 foreign actors were in the casts of plays being given in New York City alone. This indicates that Miss Gay may have gone to London to fill a vacuum. It'll be no use to suggest that to the British Minister of Labor, because all government officials, including our own, take themselves very seriously and must preserve their infallibility. But it might be in order to suggest to members of the theatrical profession, both here and abroad, that any artist who asks for protection against competition puts himself into the Castoria Brigade along with acknowledged weaklings of industry like the U. S. Steel Corporation and the Beef Trust. An artist should be glad to have his rivals appear in competition. If he is an artist, the rival will be shown up as a humbug. If he is not an artist, perhaps he can learn something from the rival.

Anyway, our stage is largely recruited from foreign parts, especially from the British Empire. Tell it not to Mayor Bill Thompson, for if he should take it into his head to purify our stage by excluding such actors as George Arliss and William Faversham, who were both born in England, he would also have to deport our beloved Mrs. Whiffen, and even Margaret Anglin would have to go, for she's a Canadian. But worst of all, Big Bill would have to send Chicago's own Mary Garden back to her native Scotland.

The fact is that many of our finest artists and most popular stage figures have come across the water. There is Robert Mantell, born in Ayrshire, Scotland. Frederick Warde, another great tragedian, is of English birth. Both Rose Coghlan and Lionel Barrymore first saw the light through a British fog. So did Tom Wise, who has just died. Charlie Chaplin is a Londoner, and Mary Pickford a Canadian. Isn't it terrible? Think of all the American lads and lasses who have been turned away from Hollywood because Charlie and Mary had crowded them out!

From England have come actors like Tyrone Power, Lionel Atwill, Leslie Howard, Ernest Glendinning, Charles Cherry, Basil Sydney, A. E. Matthews, A. E. Anson, H. Cooper Cliffe, Charles Bryant, Hubert Druce, Lawrance D'Orsay, and, in spite of his name, Ferdinand Gottschalk. Along with them came actresses like Julia Marlowe, born in London, Edith Wynne Matthison, Violet Kemble Cooper, Lynn Fontanne, Estelle Winwood, Alexandra Carlisle, Emma Dunn and Violet Heming. Even Eva Le Gallienne is a native of London.

SINGING COMEDIENNE

TRIXIE FRIGANZA, comedienne, will top the new vaudeville bill in the Davis with a new song skit.

FROM PAREE

MAZIE LUNETTE has a "Mlle." attached to her name so we take it she comes from Paris. She'll be seen in the Harris.

'Tis Nothing New!

It was ever thus. Both Henry Miller and Clara Morris, whom we fondly venerated as Americans, were of the breed anathema to Big Bill. Annie Russell also came from Liverpool.

And some are sneaking in through side doors that are not being watched so closely. Philip Merivale, for instance, was born in India, like the late Bruce McRae; but they are British just the same and nevertheless. Leon Errol came from Australia and Marie Dressler from Canada, but they are Britons for all that. May Robson is Australian and May Irwin Canadian. Donald Brian is a Newfoundlander, and Willard Mack's mother is Our Lady of the Snows.

There are some of our stage folk, however, who will be absolved of

Musicianship Rock Upon Which Rests Art of Vocalism

Musical Taste Has Caught Up With Great Artists of Tradition.

By J. FRED LISSFELT.

IT IS very gratifying to have so many of my colleagues and most concert patrons absolutely in accord with my review of the recent Galli-Curci concert, but one L. F. P. of Ben Avon, after assuring me that my appraisal of the singer was "no doubt entirely just," goes on to say:

"Were you the artist (in that greater sense) that Galli-Curci is, and had your criticisms been tempered with a little human sympathy, they would have added force and have done more for the cause of art. When in the future your good name may be engraved on cold perishable stone, Galli-Curci's name with Jenny Lind's will be graven imperishably in the hearts of mankind."

It seems now, that I must establish my right to criticise the singer in question and somehow confess my creed regarding singers in general. You see, it was this way. My father was a merchant, and, having inherited some old world cultural germ, took his recreation among singing clubs, in reading circles, at the theater and in the concert halls. His mother understood no English, but she took her son to see Booth, and Modjeska, Minnie Maddern, and Joe Jefferson. With our earliest bedtime stories we heard stories of their great art, their diction, their stage deportment. We lived in a neighborhood where German and French were as common as English and gathered the sentiments of several peoples in their singing. Then came stories of Max Alvarez, of Lilli Lehmann, the De Reszkes, Klafsky, when my people returned from the opera. In our home we always sang. Schumann and Mozart, Schubert and Beethoven, Verdi or Gounod were as familiar to our ears as the simplest hymns. Soon we were able to find for ourselves what charm lay in the art of the great players and singers, and so I sometimes make the mistake to believe that we are still in the Golden Age when the singer labored for his ideal, for, musically, we have come up with Schumann-Heink, Sembrich, Lehmann, Plancon, Wuellner, Elena Gerhardt—to name but a few who have built my traditions.

Since the war, when I lived with the French peasant for many months, it has been my privilege to sojourn for long periods among the peoples of Italy, Switzerland, Austria and Spain, listening close to the ground that I might learn the true spirit of their singing along with the sophisticated art of the concert and opera halls. Everywhere I have tried to converse with the great singers about their work, to find their attitude when they are at ease and away from the glare of the footlights, to find whether they are artists or plainly money-grabbers.

Thus my conclusions have taught me a great reverence for sincerity in any singer. If the musicianship is sound, as with the aforenamed stars, I acclaim the singer. If the voice is a beautiful organ and has been developed to its greatest possibilities I acclaim. I adore youth, but I bow before such singers as Schumann-Heink, who, as her vocal powers decrease with her climbing years, is the ever faithful in producing art that for dramatic power and sheer human emotion has hardly known an equal.

When I listen to graduate Follies stars and other upstarts who are making their way in the concert field merely because of a clever advertising agent, you must see that even unwillingly I must stand them beside those who were the great singers before modern methods could exploit them. The comparisons are seldom happy. Moreover we may rest assured that great singing is not a thing of the past, for if we glance backward to Gigli's recital, to Onegin's, or to Tibbet's during the closing season, we regard the work of at least three stars who stand for the finest—musicianship, a well-kept voice, sincerity. They were advertised as first-class singers; we went to buy a silver spoon and it was sterling. I am sorry I cannot place Galli-Curci among that glorious trio.

Ralph Morgan Lead in Pitt

THE George Sharp Production Stock Company, which opens its second season in the Pitt Theater with a comedy drama, "Take My Advice," Monday evening, April 9, announces Ralph Morgan, prominent Broadway star, as this season's leading man. Mr. Morgan appeared in the leading role of "Take My Advice" during its engagement in the Belmont, New York, this season. He also was starred in "The Clutching Claw," announced as the second offering of the company in the Pitt.

ANNA CHANG will help give an Oriental touch to "Hula Blues," new stage show coming to the Penn.

CURTAIN CALLS by GEORGE SEIBEL

Tall Talk This!

Bernard Shaw has been talking about Ibsen. He says that Ibsen "was done with Shakespeare and had wrapped him into a small parcel before he was 20, had passed the stage of Moliere before he was 40, and of Goethe before he was 50." Too bad that Ibsen did not live to 100. He might have caught up with Shaw!

Rise in Stocks

Stock companies are coming back into favor with marvelous rapidity. In the season of 1925-26 there were 153 permanent stock companies on record. In the season of 1926-27 there were 237, an increase of nearly 80 per cent. The desire to see real people, not pictures; to hear the human voice, not records or radio, and to eliminate high railroad and hotel expenses have worked together to cause this rise in stocks. There will shortly be three stock companies at once in Pittsburgh.

Nora Bayes Gone

The death of Nora Bayes a few days ago brings to mind that she first sang two famous songs—"Over There" and "Down Where the Wurzburger Flows." She danced with the Prince of Wales—she was married five times—her real name was Dora Goldberg. And she had three adopted children because she had none of her own. Her best epitaph would be the words of Miss Jacobs, her secretary: "She tried to make people happy."

As to Isadora

Some skeptics have been reading the autobiography of Isadora Duncan—and doubting about her literary passions. Did she read Marcus Aurelius behind the scenes in Ada Rehan's company? Did she read Immanuel Kant and wash him down with a glass of milk while she was in Hungary? Did she—? There used to be a musical comedy queen who talked about her "morning dip" in Homer. Captious critics ought to bethink them that it is something to have heard of Homer and Marcus Aurelius.

Tramp Comic In Sheridan

BILLY ARLINGTON, hobo comedian, will be the feature in the Sheridan Square the first three days of the week in a skit called "Mistakes Will Happen," in which he is assisted by Eleanor Arlington, C. I. Taylor and Joseph Ward. The photoplay feature will be Olive Borden and Antonio Moreno in "Come to My House." Olyn Landick, female impersonator, calls his act, "You'll Learn About Women From Me." Valentine Vox and Emily Walters, ventriloquists, will appear in their new act, "Coral Gables." The Agemos will offer an acrobatic act. John Edward Mitchell's new song school organlogue, additional screen features and other attractions will complete the bill. For the last half of the week the vaudeville feature will be the Five Jansleys, circus acrobats; Joe Darcy will sing some of the songs written by him. The Farrell Taylor Trio has a new act, "Outside the Circus." The Galla Rini Sisters, the screen feature, Irene Rich in "Powder My Back," and other attractions complete the bill.

HUMORIST

WILL ROGERS, humorist and stage and screen actor, will give a talk in the Carnegie Music Hall Tuesday night.

Davis Feature Is Friganza

TRIXIE FRIGANZA, presenting a comedy skit, "My Bag o' Trix," will be the headliner of Keith-Albee vaudeville in the Davis beginning Monday. The screen presentation announced is "Come to My House," with Olive Borden and Antonio Moreno. A miniature musical comedy will be presented by Gracellan and Theodore, under the title of "Nights of Love." They are assisted by four others. Pat Henning and company will appear in "Versatility," a little of everything. Ray and Dot Dean also will appear. Ray is billed as "Elmer, the Boob McNutt of Vaudeville." Other acts will be Bury's dog stars, that dance, pose and perform acrobatics; and Arthur Petley and company, aerial artists. The program will be brought to a close with news reels and "Topics of the Day."

Gown Artist Is Harris Act

A VAUDEVILLE feature in the Harris is to be "Paris Fashions While You Wait," in which Alphonse Berg creates gowns in a minute or two. Miss Ann and Mr. Frank, who have been heard over the air by radio fans, will sing. Caroline Scoville and Steve Gillis and four girls offer a farce comedy skit interspersed with singing and stepping, "The Corner Drug Store." Max Fields and Anna Fink will present their comedy skit, "Look Out There." The Holly Sisters are musicians and singers. Lunette and Mitchell offer a novelty in "The Enchanted Canvas." The photoplay feature will be Patsy Ruth Miller in "Red Riders of Canada." A new song school, additional screen features and other attractions will complete the program.

Aldine Bill Has Comedy

NAT C. HAINES, comedian, will top the bill in Loew's Aldine in his newest vaudeville offering, "Hello, Mama," introducing songs. Unlike many vaudeville sketches, "Hello, Mama," has a plot. A cast of six will be seen in the act. Marvel & Co. will present "Star Light," a dancing revue. Coutler & Rose, in "Darktown Frolics," will present a blackface act of comedy and antics and harmonica playing. Hazel Crosby, with Max Rich at the piano, will sing a group of songs. Emilons' "Thrills in the Air" will open the show. The feature picture will be Jack Holt in "The Warning."

WINDSOR MERRIMENT IS TOO SAD

By ALAN DALE,
Famous Dramatic Critic of Universal Service.

NEW YORK, March 24.

LISTENING to the frightful and devastating Elizabethan "humor" of "The Merry Wives of Windsor" last Monday, and watching an audience of modern, sane adults trying their darndest to laugh at it, feeling it to be their duty to laugh at it, and, as a matter of fact, mostly unable for the most part, to understand the mere words, I was gently, if wrongfully amused.

There was the intellectual veteran, Mrs. Fiske, biting her way viciously through the lamentable quips of Mistress Page; there was the once hoydenish Miss Crosman endeavoring blandfully to make heads or tails of Mistress Ford; there was the elocutionary, yet theatrical, Mr. Skinner, made up with a huge paunch, working hard to render the disgusting, bestial role of the bibulous Falstaff intelligible to our modern ears, and there was the audience pretending to believe that Elizabethan humor was as droll today as it was in Shakespeare's day.

I submit that to the average uneducated audience, Shakespeare is a sealed book, its characters speaking an alien language, with its beauties of thought and idea veiled to the uninitiated. The circumstance that most of us have sorely lacked a classical education must militate immensely against the acceptance of Elizabethan humor—and it is difficult to believe that good Queen Bess herself could have smiled at some of Shakespeare's quips. Scholars and erudites alone may grasp the subtleties of such comedy as may be found in "The Merry Wives," and it is really no disgrace for the average public school citizen to admit that the language is almost unintelligible. And apart from the language what is there in this "mirthful comedy" to make any sort of appeal?

Imagine being asked to snicker at the spectacle of an adipose, swinish and hideous old chap, being cast into a basket of "foul clothes" and carted to the Thames, by the two "merry women" whom he has clandestinely courted!

A star cast reminds me of those one-cent sales so popular in some emporia. You get two for one cent more than the price of one. In "The Merry Wives" you get Mrs. Fiske for $3.85, and should get Mrs. Fiske, plus Miss Crosman, for $3.86. And then the amusing "etiquettes!" Mrs. Fiske comes first, then Mr. Skinner, and it is merely "with" Miss Crosman. Goodness only knows why. Miss Crosman is as fine an artist as either Mrs. Fiske or Mr. Skinner, but there is the "etiquetty." And all dished up in "The Merry Wives" to see old Falstaff mirthfully hidden under "foul clothes." The three of them should have come forward and have warbled "one for all, and all for one." I feel sure that Mr. Ziegfeld would have "loaned" the ditty for the occasion.

As for our other Shakespearen brew in the Hampden Theater, we went rather curiously to see a play that is seldom acted. After sitting through "Henry V" we became certain that there were excellent reasons for its infrequent performance. I can recall vaguely seeing it at Daly's Theater with the late Lewis Waller in the cast, but since then it has lain dormant. Mr. Hampden is a magnificent elocutionist, but did not shine in this "revival." I have never credited him with an "accent," and have generally thought that he was free from the incubus. But as Henry V it almost seemed as though some of his tones were nasal, which I have never noticed in any of his other impersonations.

I see that Bernard Shaw in London last Monday declared that Shakespeare and Moliere were like beginners compared with Ibsen. He omitted to add what I feel sure he thinks, that Ibsen is like a beginner compared with Shaw.

HELLO!

"HELLO," smiles Nat C. Haines, who, with a company of players, will offer "Hello Mama" as a feature of the Aldine vaudeville bill.

Waltz Contest In Danceland

NIGHTLY dances are held on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday in Danceland, Olympic Theater Building. A prize waltz contest is held every Monday evening, and the best waltzing couple is chosen by the audience, acting as the judge. A chaperon and a group of young women are present to provide dancing partners for Pittsburghers and out-of-town visitors, who wish to dance and are without partners.

Will Rogers Here Tuesday

WILL ROGERS, author, humorist and actor, will speak in the Carnegie Music Hall Tuesday evening. While he has not announced a subject for his talk, it is likely to consist of a monologue of witty comment on current politics and personalities, it is pointed out.

"My Maryland" Back in Alvin

LOCAL theater patrons will have another opportunity of seeing the popular American operetta, "My Maryland," which returns Monday for a brief engagement in the Alvin. The same production and company that were for four weeks last November is returning, headed by the same four principals, Lottice Howell, George Rymer, Alexander Clark and Betty Byron. Those who did not see "My Maryland" when it was here before may be interested in the fact that it has been acclaimed everywhere that this company has played as one of the finest operettas. Sigmund Romberg, composer of "Blossom Time" and "The Student Prince" music, also wrote the score of "My Maryland," which includes two popular choral numbers, "Your Land and My Land" and "The Boy in Gray." "My Maryland" will remain in the Alvin only one week on this visit. There will be the usual matinee.

Many Singers In Stanley

THE Florentine Singers, composed of 50 men and women of Florence, Italy, are coming to the Stanley for the week beginning Monday afternoon. The choir is conducted by Sandro Benelli, professor of choral singing at the Royal Conservatory. The program is to include both sacred and secular music. The screen attraction for the week will be George Bancroft in "The Showdown." Evelyn Brent, Neil Hamilton and Fred Kohler are among the featured players. Orchestral music, news reel and "Topics of the Day" will complete the bill.

"Hula Blues" In Penn Acts

"HULA BLUES" is the title of the stage show to be given in Loew's Penn, opening Monday. It includes Drena Beach, acrobatic dancer; Moore and Powell, variety entertainers; Jean and Fritz Hubert, in an original drunk dance; a group of talented South Sea dancers headed by Prince Tui Poi and billed as the "Royal Samoans"; Anna Chang, singer, recently seen in the Penn in "Tokio Blues," and the Felicia Sorel Girls in "The Borneo." Don Albert and the Penn Stage Orchestra will again be seen and heard. The picture for the week will be Dolores Del Rio in "Ramona."

Actors Demand

all suspicion of any British taint, Leo Ditrichstein was born in Hungary and Albert Bruning in Berlin. Martha Hedman came from Sweden and Francine Larrimore from Russia. Glida Varesi is Italian and Irene Bordoni is French. Fritzi Scheff hails from Vienna and Flora Zabelle from Constantinople. Alla Nazimova is Russian and Patricia Collinge, Irish. The Schildkrauts are Rumanian. Jacob Ben Ami is Russian. Jose Ruben is Belgian. Lou Tellegen is Dutch or Greek or something. Georges Renavent is French.

The saddest thought of all is that our great American composer, Irving Berlin, the Beethoven of Tin-Pan Alley, is really Russian, just as his predecessor, Victor Herbert of the American Rhapsody was a German born in Ireland.

Macready Riots

Enough has been said to show the absurdity of all this nonsense about protecting our art from foreign invasion. Art that is whining for protection, either in England or America, had better go and hoe potatoes. There has always been a certain amount of professional jealousy between English and American actors. When William C. Macready played in New York, 1849, there was a riot in which more than a score of people were killed outright and about 100 wounded—largely because Edwin Forrest's London engagement had been a failure and Forrest had hissed Macready in Edinburgh. At a later date such a gentleman and scholar as Lawrence Barrett felt there had been a conspiracy to make his London engagement a frost.

But mostly there has been harmony and hospitality. Henry Irving was as much at home in America as in England. Mary Anderson won a triumph and a husband in London. Beerbohm Tree, the Kendals, the Jersey Lily, Mrs. Campbell, E. S. Willard and many other English players have always been welcome here and their successors always should be welcome. Both art and commerce thrive best under the largest liberty—every impediment to trade or travel hurts the one that builds the wall. Let them come on—maybe there'll be another Modjeska or Mansfield in the crowd. We can afford to be both hospitable and generous, and pity that benighted British minister of labor who imagines he is helping the British theaters by keeping out an American actress.

PROMINENT

FRANCINE LA ROCQUE is prominent in the cast of "Pretty Babies," new Academy burlesque show.

Tunes, Variety Academy Show

"PRETTY BABIES," a burlesque said to be characterized by novelty features, tuneful music and vaudeville specialties, will be presented in the Academy with two shows daily and a midnight performance Tuesday. The company includes Peggy Mayo, comedienne, who plays the leading feminine role. She is a character song singer and she features new songs of the "blues" type. Maurice Cash, Jewish comic, is prominent in the fun-making. He is aided in the comedy scenes by Bennie Platt, eccentric funster. The tenor singing of George L. Clark is featured. Jack Baker is a dancing comedian. Francine La Rocque, "the southern nightingale," and Bobbie Laverne, soubret, are in the cast. In addition to the regular show there will be an extra dancing feature.

Nixon Cards Musical Play

"HIT THE DECK" is to be presented in the Nixon for a week, opening Monday. It is a musical comedy of which Vincent Youmans is both the composer and producer. Mr. Youmans is a young music writer whose tunes pleased in a number of well-known musical comedies, including "No, No, Nannette," in which were two song hits, "Tea for Two" and "I Want to Be Happy," twice as many as the number required to make a musical comedy a success, according to stage tradition. "Hit the Deck" also has two outstanding popular numbers in its musical score, "Hallelujah" and "Sometimes I'm Happy." In a company of many there will be Queenie Smith, in the leading female role. Also in prominent parts are Charles Purcell, Juanita Chefalo, Helen La Vonne and Polly Mara. The production is described as having been made with a lavish purpose and the scene in China is the last act is particularly referred to as gorgeously costumed. An unusually large orchestra will interpret the score.

VOICELESS DRAMA WITH SHADOWS AS PLAYERS

INDIAN ROMANCE -:- UNDERWORLD -:- CIRCUS LIFE -:- IN NEW PICTURES

DOLORES DEL RIO, Mexican actress, is the star of "Ramona," a romance of a half breed girl and her Indian lover, which is a Penn booking.

GEORGE BANCROFT is hardboiled again. It's a scene too kindly look he is giving Neil Hamilton, who appears with him in "The Showdown," Stanley and Regent film.

"COME OVER to My House," says Olive Borden, who is coming to the Davis and Sheridan Square.

DOROTHY REVIER'S face registers suspense in this scene from "The Warning," which is to be sounded and unraveled on the Aldine screen, beginning Monday.

WE PRESUME you can guess which one is Charlie Chaplin. The derby hat ought to help you. Charlie and his film, "The Circus," are to be prominent for a week in the Grand and Liberty.

Romance, Mystery And Comedy Offered In New Film Dramas

Dolores Del Rio in "Ramona"—George Bancroft Makes Debut as Star.

By MILDRED FILLMORE

GREETINGS, movie fans. Spring is here and it won't be long now until our handsome ushers parade down the aisles before us in new summer uniforms. Spring—but I guess I had better keep to the movies and let the poets go into ecstasy over this season of romance and dandelions. So here goes.

The Penn, beginning Monday, is to offer the picture version of Helen Hunt Jackson's romantic story of early California days. It is "Ramona," and the star is Dolores Del Rio. From the gay society life of Mexico City came Dolores to thrill us with her Charmaine in "What Price Glory" and with her sad-eyed Russian peasant girl in "Resurrection." Now she is to appear before us as the heroine in a love romance between a half breed girl and an Indian. Warner Baxter does the Hiawatha act as the hero. Another member of the cast is Roland Drew. Roland first claimed the attention of the movie public as one of the student-actors from Paramount's picture school. He was known as Walter Goss in those days, but names undergo frequent changes in the land of the silent drama.

It sometimes pays to be bad—that is, in the movies. Take George Brancroft, for example. For years George enjoyed the reputation of being one of the worst badmen on the stage. Then he transferred his villainy to the screen. In recent months he developed a funny phase to his badness. And now the men who make movie stars have made a star out of this smiling villain. His first starring production is "The Showdown," a Stanley and Regent booking. The picture is a melodrama, concerning the search for "black gold," with men fighting about the love of a woman. Evelyn Brent is the woman. Neil Hamilton—one the Geste brothers—is in the cast. The picture, when it first went into production, was announced as "Honky Tonk." So if you wondered, like I did, what become of "Honky Tonk," the answer is "The Showdown." And by the way, the "black gold" referred to above is oil.

A sure sign of spring is the circus. And a couple of them are to be with us—on the screen. Charlie Chaplin and his picture, "The Circus," will come Monday for a week's stay in the Grand and Liberty. Critics have heralded this vehicle as a great laugh piece. The other circus drama is "The Leopard Lady," the Olympic booking. This photoplay is a mystery melodrama—there's murder and that sort of thing. Jacqueline Logan portrays the title role—that of a woman who joins a circus troupe on a secret mission, namely, to solve a series of baffling crimes.

Again we are to have Jack Holt minus his usual cowboy decorations. This time he's in the role of a disreputable sea captain, who engages in the dark trick of opium smuggling. This picture is titled "The Warning." The heroine, a girl detective in this case, is essayed by Dorothy Revier. The film is to be shown in the Aldine.

Olive Borden is featured in "Come to My House," the screen booking for the Davis and Sheridan Square. The title isn't very enlightening, but we understand the plot has to do with a girl, who has everything in life that wealth can secure, but who cannot master her own heart. Antonio Moreno is the leading man. It's been rather long time since Antonio was here in a new picture.

It looks as if titles are worth so much a word to their originators. Here's another one that will burn up a lot of "juice" if it's put in the lights—"Love Me and the World Is Mine." It is the picture coming to the Cameo and Cameraphone and it offers, for a third time, the Mary Philbin-Norman Kerry combination. The photoplay is a version of the Austrian novel, "The Affairs of Hannerl." It was directed by E. A. Dupont, the man who made "Variety."

The Northwest and the mounted police of Canada figure in the new Harris photoplay, "Red Riders of Canada." Patsy Ruth Miller is the heroine. And it's a safe bet that the hero—a member of the mounted police—will get the girl as well as his man.

The State is to offer Irene Rich in "Powder My Back," which presents Miss Rich in the role of a musical comedy star.

One of the Schenley films is to be "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes." The Kenyon is to present "The Divine Woman," with Greta Garbo.

And that's all for now.

"WIVES OF WINDSOR" GETS JEERS

By JOSEPH MULVANEY,
Universal Service Staff Correspondent.

NEW YORK, March 24.

SHAKESPEARE was snubbed by critics after the premiere of "The Merry Wives of Windsor," with Mrs. Fiske, Otis Skinner and Henrietta Crosman in the cast. The classic farce was branded a pot-boiler by one reviewer; another asserted that he would perfer seeing Joe Cook or Ed Wynn in a musical comedy; another declared it never should have been written, and another deemed it blowsy and bawdy. Mrs. Fiske's gay abandon in thumbing her nose with fingers outspread in what is technically termed a Queen Anne's fan by urchins of the street was commented on generally.

Margaret Lawrence's return in "The Behavior of Mrs. Crane" and the premiere of "The Schoolmaster" in the Provincetown, were the only other openings of the week. Neither prompted the hurling of hats into the air.

The Winter Garden production, "Artists and Models," goes on the road tonight. Critics smothered this with superlatives. "Escape," the Galsworthy drama with Leslie Howard, goes forth, too, with five months to its credit, and wreaths of laurel on the pale brow of the leading man.

The playbill for next week is rather routine in appearance. Eva Le Gallienne is reviving "Hedda Gabler." Willard Mack will revive Sgt. Michael Devlin of the Northwest mounted police in a new play, "The Scarlet Fox," in which the author will be starred.

"The Beggars' Opera" will be revived, too, by Jones and Green. "Divorce a la Carte," a comedy by Samuel Ruskin Golding, is announced also.

The stage is suffering from more than seasonal apathy.

PURSUED

THE VILLAIN continues to pursue Patsy Ruth Miller—this time in the North Country in "The Red Riders of Canada," Harris film.

Penn Screen Has 'Ramona'

"RAMONA," Dolores Del Rio's first United Artists starring production, will open in the Penn Monday. The film is based on Helen Hunt Jackson's American love classic. In the supporting cast are Warner Baxter, Roland Drew, Vera Lewis and Michael Visaroff. For those who are not familiar with "Ramona," as a book it is now in its ninety-second edition. It is a story of white man's greed and the romance of a half-breed girl and her Indian lover. The time and locale is nineteenth century California. Edwin Carewe directed. A stage revue, "Hula Blues," also will be on the bill.

MUSSOLINI SPEAKS FOR NEW MUSIC

By MME. COBINA WRIGHT
Famous Songstress and Society Leader.

NEW YORK, March 24.

MUSSOLINI, like Shakespeare, believes that "music hath charms to soothe the savage breast," and he declares that it is essential for the public not only to take an active interest in the progress of modern music, but a practical part in its support. A friend of mine recently attended the Musical Exhibition of the Twentieth Century at Bologna and heard the following sentiments expressed by Italy's dictator:

"It is an absolute necessity that the public learn to like and appreciate modern music—the kind which cannot be understood at the first hearing.

"We must overcome the animosity so general toward modern Italian music. I personally prefer old operas, but believe that the production of new operas is commendable because some of them may be superior to the older compositions. If 50 new operas are produced in a season, and two of them succeed, we are compensated for the effort and funds wasted on the 48 others."

I wish, indeed, that more of our important officials would take this attitude. Hurrah for Mussolini!

Lisa Roma, the young American soprano who, for the last two months, has been touring the country with Maurice Ravel, interpreting his songs, tells me that she has been doing double duty as an interpreter, since Ravel does not speak a word of English. During the journeying, she has been called upon more than once to come to the aid of the composer in an embarrassing situation.

"In Chicago," Miss Roma told me, "we gave three concerts, with the Chicago Symphony, the last on Saturday night before leaving immediately for our next concert with the Cleveland Orchestra. We shipped our belongings on to Cleveland, planning to board the train in our evening clothes.

"When we arrived at Symphony Hall, 20 minutes before the concert was scheduled to begin, Ravel discovered to his consternation that he had forgotten to bring his dress shoes, which he had packed by mistake. Ravel, whose attire is always the pink of perfection, was helpless. He couldn't make himself understood, so I was called to the rescue. The question was, how on earth to get those trunks. How I managed to locate them, I can't imagine, but with much effort and burning of wires, the shoes finally appeared, and, though the Chicago audience, for the first time in history, was kept waiting 20 minutes for a symphony concert, Ravel conducted with no more fears as to his sartorial appropriateness and the audience was unaware of the little tragedy behind the scenes."

Those who fear that America is going to the musical bow-wows while only materialism is rampant, can take heart from the words of George Engles, the astute manager of symphony societies, prima donnas and virtuosi. Engles, who is not given to exaggeration, and who knows his musical book from A to Z, revealed the other day that the United States not only loves music, but spends $20,000,000 yearly to support it.

"Far from being unmusical," explains Engles, "the United States gives a financial support to good music greatly exceeding that of any European country.

"The thirteen major symphony orchestras of the nation alone exact a tribute of $6,000,000. The two leading opera houses—New York and Chicago—draw another $3,500,000, and the remainder goes to individual artists, summer concerts and orchestras and minor opera companies.

"Symphony orchestras," he added, "have increased, in all probability, more than any other musical group."

Town Built For Picture

A HUNGARIAN village nestling on the side of a mountain in First National Studio's large grounds, has been built for Billie Dove's new film, "The Yellow Lily."

SHE'S STAR

ANOTHER FILM starring Irene Rich is coming to the State. It is titled "Powder My Back."

FAREWELL

MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK will appear in a farewell concert in the Syria Mosque Monday night.

Noted Singer Here Monday

ATYPICALLY Schumann-Heink program will feature the farewell concert of that noted singer in Syria Mosque Monday night. Old favorite songs and opera arias will compose the program. Many of the numbers are those which she herself has virtually made famous during her career in America. Mme. Schumann-Heink will have as her guests at the concert here the 10 oldest people who heard her in Pittsburgh 20 years ago, and her request is that they be seated in the front row, so that she can welcome them on her entrance.

Olive Borden Star in Davis

"COME TO MY HOUSE," starring Olive Borden and featuring Antonio Moreno, will be the feature photoplay in the Davis for a week, beginning Monday. It is taken from a story of the same name by Arthur Somers Roche and is the drama of a girl who has everything in life, but who cannot master her own heart. She is torn between the love of two men. The cast includes Doris Lloyd, Ben Bard, Cornelius Keefe and Richard Maitland. The Keith-Albee vaudeville program will be headed by Trixie Friganza, musical comedy player, in a new skit, "A Song a Minute."

"Showdown" in Stanley, Regent

"THE SHOWDOWN," starring George Bancroft, will open Monday on the Stanley and Regent screens. The story takes place in the oil fields of Tampico, where Bancroft has gone in an effort to retrieve his fortunes by a last desperate gamble. Into this environment comes a delicately nurtured girl from New York. She is warned by Bancroft that the stealthy menace of the jungle will, in the end, break down her morale. She scoffs at him and then—with dramatic suddenness—she goes to pieces and Bancroft finds himself faced by the necessity of saving her from the dangers of her own desires. The cast includes Evelyn Brent, Neil Hamilton, Fred Kohler, Arnold Kent and Leslie Fenton. The stage attraction in the Stanley will be the Florentine singers, a chorus composed of 50 men and women. There will be a Vitaphone program in the Regent.

Grand, Liberty Book Chaplin

"THE CIRCUS," starring Charlie Chaplin, is coming to the Grand and Liberty screens Monday. With the famous comedian will be clowns, lions, tigers, wire walkers, acrobats—everything, in fact, that makes a circus complete. Charlie plays a wandering lad, who is mixed up in a series of hilarious adventures. Merna Kennedy, with red hair and eyes of blue, just 4 feet 2 in height, is his leading woman. Others in the cast are Harry Crocker, Henry Bergman, Betty Morrissy and Allan Garcia. A novelty presentation, "Frenzy," featuring H. B. Warner and Mary Carr, will be an added attraction at both theaters. The Rubeville Quartet and the Clown Xylophonists will appear on the Liberty stage.

Mary Philbin Star in Cameo

"LOVE ME AND THE WORLD IS MINE" is the new photoplay booking in the Cameo. It features Mary Philbin and Norman Kerry. The picture is based on the Austrian novel, "The Affairs of Hanneri," and much of the action is laid against the background of the gay Vienna of pre-war days. The film was directed by E. A. Dupont, the German director, who made "Variety." The cast includes Betty Compson, Henry B. Walthall and George Seigman. There are hundreds of extra players in the cast. A comedy and news pictures are on the bill.

TAMES 'EM

JACQUELINE LOGAN tames animals in her role of a circus performer in "The Leopard Lady," Olympic picture.

Aldine Books 'The Warning'

"THE WARNING" will open Monday as the photoplay in Loew's Aldine. The plot deals with the adventures of two secret service agents in rounding up a gang of opium smugglers. Jack Holt is seen in a rough and ready sort of role, portraying a disreputable sea captain, who owns a smuggling steamer. Dorothy Revier is seen as a daring girl detective. The cast includes Pat Harmon, Eugene Strong, Norman Trevor, George Kuwa and Frank Lackteen. Five vaudeville acts will be on the bill.

'Leopard Lady' Olympic Film

THE life of a screen player isn't what it's cracked up to be, according to Jacqueline Logan, who is featured in "The Leopard Lady," which will come to the Olympic Monday. Miss Logan, as the leopard trainer of a European circus, worked several days, during the filming of the picture, in a large cage with six fierce jungle cats. "The Leopard Lady" is a screen version of Edward Childs Carpenter's stage play. The cast includes Alan Hale and Robert Armstrong. There will be two Vitaphone attractions—"Folomon's Children," a two-reel playlet, and Fanny Rice, comedienne, in a group of song characterizations.

Northwest in Harris Picture

"RED RIDERS OF CANADA," featuring Patsy Ruth Miller, will be the screen attraction in the Harris, beginning Monday. The picture was adapted from the magazine story, "The Pirates of Muskeg," written by William Byron Mowery. The story is laid in the Northwest, starting with a double murder by a character called "The Buzzard," a fur pirate. Short screen entertainment and vaudeville acts complete the bill.

HEROINE

MARY PHILBIN is featured in "Love Me and the World Is Mine," new photoplay in the Cameo.

Miss Marcella Wynn learned her type and brought it to the fore. Fires that smoulder in her blue-black eyes serve to deepen the nocturnal shading of her skin. Swarthy Brunette, a not uncommon type—one of the twenty-four found in America, where mingle national strains from many lands.

She found the courage to be Herself..
AN off-note she had thought herself—neither one thing nor another. Veritably a violet by a mossy stone, often she had longed to be hidden from the eye—the cruelly searching eye—of family and friends. "Fair skin runs in our family" was a tradition, and she had felt morally bound to have one. The result? Vain efforts to keep from tanning. Repeated bleachings. Constant peeling. Looking ghostly from chalk-white powder. Penalties a-plenty for trying to acquire a complexion she was never meant to have . . . Finally, a wise friend stopped her flounderings.
"Why try to be a blonde, my dear, because others of your family are? In Pompeian's study of type your coloring is shown as Swarthy Brunette—a type of infinite possibilities. Develop it. Choose your powder to bring out the écru richness of your skin" . . . Then it was she solved the secret of her hidden beauty . . . Soon, unmasked before her critics was her real self—a far more charming self than they had ever known.
ALL BEAUTY IS DIVIDED INTO TYPES..DO YOU KNOW YOURS?
Or have you, too, overlooked your greatest asset? Do you know the shade of your skin? For it is the skin that holds your key to beauty's stronghold.
Accentuate your type . . . emphasize your natural coloring . . . point up your own skin-tone, if you would set yourself apart—achieve the individuality that every woman craves.
And how to do it? Match your skin with powder—as you would match two flawless jewels. Years of research have made this possible, for in the five natural shades of Pompeian Beauty Powder is one that is the precise hue of your skin. Apply it, after a dash of Pompeian Bloom—a rouge that holds your natural flush in one of five key shades.
Then—see the magic wrought by type accentuation. See the hidden you—revealed now as the loveliest, most individual self you've known!

Learning Urged on Women

THAT the ideal acquirement for woman is a practical education, and that the trend of the times is exactly in this direction, was emphasized by Dr. Cora Helen Coolidge, president of the Pennsylvania College for Women, who spoke to the Tourists' Club on Monday afternoon on "Recent Developments in the Education of Women." Orcutt's "In Quest of a Perfect Book" was reviewed by Mrs. D. N. Kellogg, who quoted the author as saying that books have come to mean something more to people than beauty of binding or design of type, as in the days when a few books were laboriously hand-made for the few who could afford to buy them; and that each individual must seek the perfect book in his own way since perfection has no place in our language except as an incentive for advancement.

TRAVEL INFORMATION

INDIAN CHIEF BIDS WHITES VISIT DOMAIN

Wants "Pale-Face" Brothers To See Blackfoot Tribes' Hunting Ground in West.

Chief Two Guns White Calf of the Blackfoot people, the Indian tribe living in and about Glacier National Park, has issued an invitation to the American people to visit his tribe in the Blackfoot domain in the Rocky Mountains.

The chief has aligned himself with the Great Northern Railway in attracting tourists. In 1927 he made a tour through the eastern states. Although he neither speaks, reads nor writes English, he is a shrewd observer of human nature.

Chief Two Guns summed up his thoughts on his return to Glacier Park last fall in a few remarks, which, translated from the Blackfoot language, are as follows:

"Judging by the way we were received in the East, I guess the white men no longer thinks all good Indians are dead. The Blackfeet are glad this is so. The treaty which my father signed and by which the 'backbone of the world,' part of our reservation, became the property of all Americans was a good thing for us because we have made many friends among the white people who have come out to spend their vacations in the mountains. They are our friends because they know us better. We can't have too many friends so I ask all white people to come out and live for a while in the beautiful land where we hunted buffalo and antelope. It will be good for them and good for us."

The Oriental Limited is the Great Northern Railway's crack train to the Northwest. It serves Glacier National Park and a number of the resort regions of the Pacific slope including Rainier National Park, Crater Lake National Park and Mt. Baker National Forest.

LINE TO ADD 2 NEW SHIPS

The Grace Line will add two 15,000-ton motor liners, the Santa Maria and the Santa Barbara, to its service between New York and the West Coast of South America. These ships will be completed next summer.

The new liners will embody the latest ideas in speed and comfort. There are no inside rooms and all are furnished with beds instead of berths. The run from New York to Valparaiso, Chile, is 4,998 miles and includes 18 ports.

Atlantic City's Hope For Pageant Revived

ATLANTIC CITY, March 24.—Supporters of the Atlantic City pageant with its national beauty contest believe that some hope for a continuance of the spectacle still exists, in spite of the disapproval of the Atlantic City Hotel Men's Association.

This hope is founded on reports which have come from city hall to the effect that the city commission may take over control of the pageant and conduct it as a municipal enterprise. In fact, Mayor A. M. Ruffu has stated that he has been thinking about such action but has not fully made up his mind at present nor has he taken up the matter with his colleagues.

There is one stumbling block in the way of immediate action by the commission. There is a municipal election scheduled for May. All members of the present commission are seeking re-election and while, up to the present, little opposition has developed, it is not considered likely that the Mayor and his colleagues will be willing to alienate at the very outset of their campaign the support of the powerful hotel interests represented by the Atlantic City Hotel Men's Association.

Should the present commission be re-elected, and there is no reason to believe it will not, and should it decide to take over control of the pageant, it is generally believed that it would be necessary to postpone the spectacle for at least a year, as there would not be sufficient time between the date of the election in May and September in which to make the necessary preparations.

Further action is also expected from the Chamber of Commerce. Although its president, Samuel P. Leeds, himself a hotel owner, and strongly in favor of the continuance of the spectacle, agreed to leave the final decision with the hotel association, he has expressed the view that the big affair is not yet lost and there is hope for its revival next year. However, as far as this year is concerned it is generally regarded as dead.

Among recent arrivals from Pittsburgh at Atlantic City hotels are: Hotel Seaside, Mrs. F. J. Tener, Mrs. R. M. Wright, Miss Alice McWilliams, Miss Ellen E. Pearson, Edward M. SHIP "TALKS" 10,000 MILES

On the recent trip of the steamer Aorangi, motor-ship of the Canadian-Australian Line, from the Antipodes to Vancouver, the wireless operators succeeded in breaking the ship's record for long-distance transmission and reception. When a few miles from Sydney, Australia, the operators were in communication with a commercial short-wave station—GKT—near London, England, a distance of some 10,000 miles.

Two days out from Sydney they got in touch with the Dominion government station at Digby Island, near Prince Rupert, N. S. The passengers appreciated the special issues of the "Aorangi News," which contained press dispatches from the distant British stations which the ship had reached thousands of miles across the oceans.

"Bad Women" Die Young in Movies, Producers State

Brunettes Have a Shorter Life of Popularity Than Blondes.

By BLAND JOHANESON.

BAD women die young. At least in fan popularity. And brunet bad women seem more convincing, hence have a shorter life of popularity than the blondes.

Two producers who have been in town recently expressed this opinion. And each one announced his determination to keep his popular box-office drawing stars in pure roles.

Each one pointed to Mary Pickford as an example of what fans really like in their movie stars. Mary never has played a role which wasn't good and innocent. And, whether she makes pictures or not, the fans will continue to love her.

On the other hand, there are any number of screen vamps, big money-makers in their day, whose day of popularity was short. Theda Bara has retired. She was the first of the vamps. Nita Naldi came later. Nita was, oh, very bad. Nita still is active in pictures, but she isn't the box office panic she once was.

Inside the movie trade, there is a game of speculation about Gloria Swanson. Is Gloria as popular as ever? Will she hold her fans? Would she hold them longer had she stuck to the good-girl roles she first played, without appearing in the bizarre, exotic characters she has affected recently?

And what of Greta Garbo? Greta is thoroughly the vamp, the temptress, the charmer. Greta has been cast in one scampy role after another. There is little doubt that she is the star of the day. The fans like her. The high-brows rant about her subtlety. Everybody is trying to write stories for her.

Max Reinhardt wants her for his one picture. Greta is a blonde. Maybe a bad blonde isn't as bad as a bad brunet. Maybe Greta is a better actress. If her popularity lasts, she will disprove the movie men's cherished theory—that the fans tire of a bad woman.

If Reinhardt fails in his desire to borrow Garbo from M-G-M for one picture, she probably will go home to Sweden for an extended vacation. There are immigration laws to be observed, adding a complicating factor to the test case against vamps the movies hope to make with Greta Garbo.

Thespian Club Here in April

AL WHITE, JR., of Philadelphia, son of the dancing master, will have charge of the chorus in the coming production of "Honestly Yours," to be played here by the Penn State Thespians in the Syrian Mosque on April 16. Mr. White was a vaudeville entertainer until three years ago, when he was forced to retire from active work because of an injured knee. In "Honestly Yours," Mr. White will introduce "The Campus Gait" for the first time.

Local Choir In Bach Work

ON April 8 the Mendelssohn Choir of Pittsburgh, Ernest Lunt, conducting, will present Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew," using the abridged edition edited by David Williams, director of music at St. Bartholemeu's Church in New York. This edition shortens the original score to a suitable length for evening performance. A quartet to be featured in the performance includes Ethyl Hayden, soprano; Grace Leslie, contralto; Arthur Kraft, tenor, and Howard Gould, bass.

Olive Borden For Sheridan

ALFRED E. GREEN'S drama, "Come to My House," starring Olive Borden, will be seen on the Sheridan Square screen Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. It is a picturization of Arthur Somers Roche's story of the same name and deals with sophisticated society and a girl's heart. Antonio Moreno plays opposite Miss Borden as the young man who steals her from her staid fiance, played by Cornelius Keefe. Vaudeville acts are on the bill.

ON STAGE

GRETA GARBO is seen as a stage actress in "The Divine Woman," one of the pictures coming to the Kenyon.

PARIS EYE ON DRESS OF HOLLYWOOD

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Motion Picture Editor of Universal Service

LOS ANGELES, March 24.

PARIS, the dictator of fashions and the autocrat of modes, has been forced to consider Hollywood in its contemplation of milady's dress, simply because motion picture styles, created eight to ten months in advance, circulate the world and put ideas in every woman's mind.

To see Norma Shearer sweep through a drama in an ultra frock, or to gaze upon Constance Talmadge in a natty sport suit with a carelessly tied scarf, excites both interest and perhaps a little envy. In planning their wardrobes the eyes of the universe copy those dress innovations.

In other words the stars unconsciously act as mannikins. Lucien Lelong, Gallot, Lanvin and other Parisian arbiters of fashion, realize full well if their styles are to be broadcast over the globe they must co-operate with Hollywood.

Winfield Sheehan, who knows his Paris as well as the rest of us know our home town, has been studying filmland's contribution to the style mart for a long time. As chief of Fox productions, he has been fully cognizant of the importantance of dressing the Fox stars as well as possible. With that idea in mind he has imported Harry Collins, one of New York's foremost dressmakers, to Hollywood.

I cornered Mr. Collins, who deserted a lucrative business to enter the movies, to ask him how he expected to dress Janet Gaynor, June Collyer, Mary Duncan and the other Fox actresses.

"Every screen star should be dressed to fit her personality," he told me. "Every woman in the films is not a good actress, but every one of them has a personality else she would not be in pictures.

"Dressing a girl for the screen is entirely different from dressing her for the street," he continued. "On the street you can go after startling effects, but on the screen the costume must not be diverting. If it is you are interfering with the play.

"But, if the fashions of the films are copied, you cannot have somber, uninspired clothes," I ventured. "Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer not long ago brought over Erte to create a new type of fashions—and Erte is an extremist."

"Plain clothes," he answered, "need not necessarily be somber and lacking in smartness. The best dressed women in the world are those who affect a certain severity in their costumes."

"Beautiful women," Mr. Collins stated, "should never be overdressed. I might cite Marion Davies for an example," he said. "Her beauty needs no adornment. She looks best in simple clothes. People talk about the improvement in her ability as an actress, but no one ever says how much better she dresses today than she did when she first started making pictures."

"Isn't that true of all of our best-known cinema favorites?" I asked him. "Styles today are much less pretentious. Ruffles and frills are no longer au fait."

"No, I don't think it is true of all stars. I know one of your Hollywood actresses whose entire screen wardrobe should be chucked in the trash basket. She is so beautiful it is a treat to look at her—but her clothes look as if a village dressmaker had come in by the day and made them."

Mr. Collins would not admit that the male sex admired this actress in spite of her frilly, be-ruffled clothes. He pooh-poohed the idea that women dress for each other as mid-Victorian and archaic.

"Have you dressed any of our Hollywood beauties," I inquired, "before you came West to set the fashions here?"

"June Collyer is a customer of mine," he answered. "I make her clothes to fit her smile, which is her greatest charm. She puts her soul into that smile and clothes must not be a distraction.

"Some women," he ventured, "have a sixth sense. They are as clothes conscious as other women are emotionally conscious. Irene Castle is one actress who knows exactly what to wear and how to wear it. Alice Brady and Madge Kennedy are both smartly and beautifully gowned always."

"What is your observation of Hollywood from what you have seen and how will you dress the different Fox actresses to suit their individual personalities?" I asked.

"My observations of Hollywood must necessarily be restricted until I have had a chance to become better acquainted here. It is one of the few resort cities in America. The women here dress on the streets much as they do at Biarritz or Deauville, in sport attire suited to the climate.

"I had the surprise of my life yesterday afternoon," he continued, "to see men walking about the Ambassador Hotel in knickers. You never see that informal attire in New York. A man in knickers at any big hotel in the afternoon would be both conspicuous and terribly self-conscious.

"As for dressing the Fox stars—I want to wait until I have talked with them and studied them before I even suggest styles for them."

Patricia Pitt Says:

Pittsburghers Dally In Warm Southland Dodging Chill Spring

OUR society folks who have been having such good times down in Florida for the last two or three months seem just a bit hesitant about coming back to the temperamental weather of a northern spring. And who could blame them? Certainly not those of us who have been snowed upon, sleeted upon and rained upon for quite some time, with just an occasional glimpse of the sun to make us optimistic of better things to come.

So none of us can wonder that those who have been wintering in Palm Beach and other southern places are stopping part-way north at the spring resorts—Virginia Hot Springs and White Sulphur Springs—for a few days or weeks. The Easter holidays loom brilliantly for these places, and already fashionable folks from all the large cities are gathering there. You remember Audrey Davies, who spent so much time with her uncle, the late Eugene O'Neill, of Pittsburgh? She is going to join her sister, Mrs. William H. Vanderbilt, at White Sulphur Springs, after spending part of the winter in the South. Among the Pittsburghers there now are Mrs. William S. Masten and her two children, who are going to remain for about two weeks. Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Benedum will arrive on Monday for several weeks, I understand.

At Virginia Hot Springs

THIS city is well represented at Virginia Hot Springs, too. Mr. and Mrs. William Larimer Mellon and their sons, William Larimer Mellon, Jr., and Matthew Taylor Mellon, have arrived there to remain over Easter, and Mrs. William G. Costin and her young son, William, Jr., are having their usual spring visit. Dr. and Mrs. Robert Milligan and their daughter, Peggy, also have joined the Pittsburgh colony. I hear, too, that Banning Grange, who is so well known here, and her mother, Mrs. William Drayton Grange, of Philadelphia, are at the Springs.

Word comes from the Springs that the annual concert of the Princeton musical clubs will be given April 6 instead of April 7, at the Homestead Theater. The concert has been held on Easter Saturday for a number of years, but the western tour of the college boys has made the change in date necessary.

Pittsburghers at Ball

A GROUP of tableaux posed by Ben Ali Haggin were attractive features of the fancy dress ball held Tuesday night in the Bath and Tennis Club at Palm Beach, I hear. There were, of course, quite a few of our local people at the ball. Mrs. James Francis Burke wore a Chinese matron's costume which she had brought over from China, and Mr. Burke wore a costume that proved quite appropriate for the rainy weather that night. It was a native Korean costume of white with a pointed hat shielded by a fluted oil paper rainy day cover in umbrella effect. Mrs. George Crawford wore a Venetian costume consisting of a rose velvet bodice and hooped skirt of taffeta in pastel shades, and a black tricorner completed the outfit. Mr. Crawford appeared as a Sheik.

The William McBrides, of Sewickley, gave a luncheon on Thursday in the Everglades Club, I understand. They had as their guests Dr. and Mrs. C. F. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Mallory, Miss Mary Downs, Thomas Mallory and Frederick C. Collins.

In Bridal Party

QUITE a few local men are included in the bridal party for the wedding of Margaret Keith, daughter of the Julian Keiths, of Warrenton, Va., and James Christy Hamilton, son of Mrs. Alfred Reed Hamilton, of Woodland road, which is scheduled for April 10 at Warrenton. Malcolm B. Hamilton is to be his brother's best man and the Pittsburgh men who will be ushers are Alfred Reed Hamilton, Jr., Richard King Mellon, John S. Hess, R. Maurice Trimbel, Jr., Walton Scully, Charles Thornton Garrison and William L. Standish, Richard B. Scandrett, of New York, and Lucien Keith II, of Warrenton, are also going to be ushers.

MISS MARY V. FLOOD, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Flood, of Forbes street, is in the South where she will be the guest of Miss Ellen Postell for several weeks. Photo by Parry.

The feminine portion of the bridal party will include Eleanor K. Duffey, of Warrenton, who will be maid of honor, and the bridesmaids, Betsy, Julia and Fanny Keith, sisters of the bride; Sarah Gillespie Hamilton, sister of the bridegroom; Mary Forbes King, Frances Carter, Margaret Avery and Helen Horner, all of Warrenton. The flower girls are to be Rita and Betty Nash, also of Warrenton.

Wedding on April 10

ANOTHER wedding set for April 10 is that of Elizabeth Stevenson, daughter of the William McCurdy Stevensons, of Denniston avenue, and William Bryce McQuiston, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Curtis McQuiston, of Bartlett street. The ceremony is to take place in the Stevenson home.

Last night, Elizabeth and her fiance were guests of honor at a dinner dance which the latter's father and mother gave in the Edgewood Country Club.

Musicale Changed

THE next in that most interesting series of morning musicales being sponsored by Mrs. Taylor Allderdice and a group of her associates is to be held next Saturday, instead of on April 3 as was first announced. It will be held, I understand, in the home of Mrs. John E. Nelson, in North Murtland avenue.

SON OF U. S. GIRL AND DUKE CHRISTENED

Audrey Emery's Boy Baptized Amid Much Old Russian Pomp

By CHOLLY KNICKERBOCKER
(Registered U. S. Patent Office)

NEW YORK, Saturday, March 24.

NO AMERICAN girl ever before has been the recipient of such high honors as have been bestowed on our own Audrey Emery since her marriage, in 1926, to H. I. H., the Grand Duke Dimitri Pavlovitch, first cousin of the murdered Tsar of Russia, and himself the person credited with relieving the world, and the ill-fated Romanoffs, of the nefarious monk, Rasputin.

Little did we suspect when Audrey was a wee tot up at Bar Harbor and later, when she had a charming habit of peeping into the drawing room at her mother's home, No. 5 East Sixty-eighth street, to see which cavaliers were calling on her debutante sister, Alexandra, now Mrs. Benjamin Moore, that Audrey would be the life helpmate of a royal personage who declined an offer of succession to the throne of Russia—providing that bit of royal Russian furniture can be retrieved from the junk pile.

Another Mrs. Vanderbilt—Mrs. William H. Vanderbilt—has decided to spend the spring season at White Sulphur Springs. A bit of news that probably will give the more exclusive Mrs. Graham Fair Vanderbilt a few unpleasant moments. For "Emily" and "Birdie" have ceased to know—and mingle with—the same group of people.

In addition to the above Mrs. Vanderbilts, the Greenbrier, at the White, already is sheltering Mrs. Hamilton McK. Twombly (born "Florrie" Vanderbilt) and her daughter, Ruth Vanderbilt Twombly.

It certainly looks like a Vanderbilt season at White Sulphur. The question is: Will "Birdie" hobnob with Emily and will "Florrie" take the trouble to bow to the two women who annexed the Vanderbilt name via matrimony?

Bride at Recent Wedding

MRS. CHARLES LOEVNER was Miss Isabel Israel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Israel, of North Negley avenue, before her recent wedding.

Who Is the Bride?

THERE seems to be a difference of opinion regarding the identity of the lady who became the slightly unexpected bride of the colorful Burton I. Plumb last week in Tunis.

Following the receipt of a cable, the J. Ives Plumbs, who pass the greater part of each year in that socially elevated community, Islip, down on Long Island's south shore, issued a short statement to the press advising those interested that their son had married the widow of Joseph Lentilhon, a highly popular youth who died out in China a few years after his marriage to Helen Curtis. So far so good. But complications arise when certain members of the proud and ancestral Lentilhon family claim it is Mrs. Joseph De Tours Lentilhon, mother of the late Joseph Lentilhon, who has become the second Mrs. Burton I. Plumb.

I, for one, can hardly credit the latter, for Mrs. Joseph De Tours Lentilhon, once Louise Everett, entered the Lentilhon clan as a bride just about 30 years ago and reportorial duty forces me to add she boasts of sufficient years to be Burton's mamma. But, adding foundation to the tale is the word of the Lentilhons that "society has anticipated the match for the last two years." Certainly the Lentilhons should know what the Lentilhons are doing.

It seems more likely that Burton, who in late years has transferred his winter activities from southern Italy and Sicily to the increasingly fashionable northern Africa, would select as his wife the daughter-in-law of the lady the Lentilhons, in their chit chat, have conferred on him.

aide, Capt. George S. Neal, United States Navy, who were in town for the day. Secretary Wilbur spoke at the Twentieth Century Club in the morning and was officially entertained later in the day. The breakfast and tea were given by Mrs. M. Day Kirk in her home in the Schenley apartments.

Engaged "Out West"

AN engagement announcement from out in California which involves a former local girl and a Pittsburgh man came out during the week. It is that of Laura Louise Banks, daughter of Mrs. Laura S. Banks, of Pasadena, formerly of Oakmont, to John Carroll Shoe, of Pittsburgh, son of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Shoe, of Philadelphia. No wedding date has been set as yet.

Play's Choice Happy One

THE STAGE AND PLAY SOCIETY'S choice of Milne's "The Romantic Age" for its latest production on Wednesday night in Carnegie Music Hall, was a most happy one. It is a cheerful English comedy, and was done just as well as we have been led to expect of these players. E. Martin Browne, who formerly lived in London, but who has been here for about a year and is teaching at the Carnegie Institute of Technology, directed the cast.

Three officers of the society, Carroll Fitzhugh, the president; Harold Geoghegan, a vice president, and Mrs. Wilmer M. Jacoby, assistant secretary and treasurer, were in the cast, and the others included Esther Ely, Mrs. Percy G. Kammerer, Elizabeth Lupton Scott, James W. Macfarlane, Rodman McClintock and Frederick Ely. Mr. Macfarlane staged the production and the properties were in charge of Miss Eleanor Grier, Miss Elizabeth Macfarlane, Mrs. John L. McK. Yardley and Mrs. Thomas Mabon. Mrs. John H. K. Burgwin, Madeleine McClintock and Fielder Clarke were at the door. Mrs. Haines Allen Machesney and Walter B. Hemmundson are the society's general stage managers, and Mrs. Machesney took her place Wednesday night for the first time after a long illness.

After the play, the Fitzhughs gave a supper in the Pittsburgh Golf Club in honor of the cast and the board of the directors of the society. The board members include Mrs. George P. Bassett, Jr., James P. Cassidy, Esther Ely, Eleanor Grier, Mrs. Thomas J. Hilliard, Mrs. Edward J. House, Reginald Johnson, James W. Macfarlane, Mrs. Machesney, Miss McClintock, Mrs. George S. Oliver, Mrs. Joseph M. Scribner, Chester M. Wallace and Mrs. C. B. Watkins.

Miss Seaman Weds

ON Wednesday evening there was an attractive home wedding when Ruth Emily Seaman, daughter of Mrs. Ruth Denny, of Howe street, was married to Thomas McNeil IV, son of Thomas McNeil, Jr., of Pittsburgh. The ceremony was performed at 7 o'clock by the Rev. Dr. Percival H. Barker, pastor of the Point Breeze Presbyterian Church.

Ruth was given in marriage by her brother, Robert Bosley Seaman, and she wore a gown of white Callot satin and rose point lace, with a court train of satin edged with lace. Her tulle veil was held by a cap of rose point and orange blossoms, and she carried white lilacs showered with lilies of the valley. Her sisters, Evelyn and Ellie, were maid of honor and flower girl, and the bridesmaid was Margaret Campbell. They all wore peach chiffon, the maid's gown being in a deeper shade than the others, and they carried Dresden bouquets.

Henry Clay Givan, of Columbia, S. C., was best man and the ushers included Albert Stanley Davis, Jr., David G. Hill and David Martin Seaman.

A dinner and reception followed the service and later the young couple left for a trip to Bermuda. They will be at home in Portland Manor, Stanton avenue, after May 1.

In every corner of this great country you will find this grand old ginger ale

WHY is it, the question is often asked by travelers, that we find "Canada Dry" served everywhere we go?

Ten years ago Americans traveling in Canada came back to this country and spoke of a fine old ginger ale. Down from Canada they brought tales of a wonderful beverage. They said then, "It has a distinctive flavor."

Distinctive flavor—that is why "Canada Dry" has been known in the Dominion since 1890. Why ten years ago Americans began demanding it in the United States. Why it is served in countless homes from Maine to California, today. Why it is a popular ginger ale.

Many ginger ales have tried to imitate "Canada Dry." Many of these ginger ales contain capsicum (red pepper) to give them bite. "Canada Dry" uses the finest quality Jamaica ginger. It is made under laboratory methods of purity and exactness from the highest quality of ingredients. That is why it is distinctive.

Shops to Display Latest Modes at City Club Review

By MRS. CHARLES M. BREGG

THE brilliant Rue de la Paix, the Paris street of many shops, will be duplicated in the first annual spring style revue, to be put on by the Woman's City Club Friday night and Saturday afternoon in the William Penn Hotel. The corridors on the seventeenth floor of the hotel will be given over to the "thoroughfare," lining which will be exhibit booths where Pittsburgh's smart shops will display their newest merchandise. Here milliners, modistes, shoe manufacturers, jewelers and furriers will contribute their quota of information on style, so that milady may feel safely and correctly informed on the newest modes for the spring. The formal revue will be staged in the ball room at three different hours, 8 o'clock on Friday night and again at 2 and 4 on Saturday afternoon.

A number of debutantes of the last two or three seasons will serve as models, among them being Elizabeth Lupton Scott, Josephine Nicola, Craigie McKay, Clodagh McCune, Ellen McClay, Suzanne Trimble, Eleanor Baton and Florence Wainwright. On the models committee are Mrs. Ernest Newbold Calhoun, Mrs. George S. Ebbert, Mrs. Eugene Wellington Pargny, Mrs. E. L. Stevenson, Mrs. William Thaw, Jr., Mrs. Charles H. Kline, Mrs. Samuel A. Pickering and Mme. Louise Ritz.

Plan Modernistic Stage

The modernistic stage is being designed by a noted artist and the decorations of the ballroom are being supervised by Mrs. C. L. Pierce, Jr., assisted by Mrs. W. Norton McCutcheon, Miss Anna Bell Craig, Miss Lucetta Burns, Mrs. Ethel J. Shaw, Mrs. John R. McCune, Mrs. James S. McGill and Mrs. G. W. Morrison. There will be music, of course, and the models will cross the stage and descend on the runway to move among the guests, thus showing their "wares" at closer vantage.

Tea and coffee tables will be arranged about the ballroom and those supervising this feature have asked that anyone expecting to entertain groups of friends make her reservations for the specific sessions she desires. The reservations committee is composed of Mrs. W. U. Follansbee, Mrs. Charles B. Ellis, Mrs. Abigail Wainwright, Mrs. Frank H. Stephens, Mrs. Thomas Woods, Mrs. John M. Freeman, Mrs. Charles Trimble, Miss Bess I. Patton and Mrs. Frank Aubrey Hugo.

To Sell Cigarets

Cigarets will be sold by a committee composed of Miss Geraldine West, Miss Dorothy Ryland, Mrs. Carl Borntraeger and Miss Jean Curry McKinney.

The souvenir programs are being compiled by Mrs. A. W. Robertson and her aides, who are Mrs. John R. Hermes, Mrs. A. W. Smith, Jr., Mrs. Wilson Ferguson, Mrs. T. M. Girdler, Mrs. I. W. England, Miss Julia C. Snell, Mrs. E. H. Bingler, Mrs. Phineas Buchbinder, Mrs. Joseph C. Heckman, Mrs. W. B. Chapman, Miss Minerva A. Dean, Mrs. J. Edward Lewis, Mrs. A. B. Saurman, Mrs. Andrew A. Armstrong, Mrs. Jessie C. Stewart, Mrs. Sarah M. Phillips, Mrs. Samuel E. Diescher, Miss Alice H. Benning, Miss Ethel G. Sutton, Mrs. William M. Justice and Miss Mary F. Hulsman.

Mrs. Ambrose Nevin Diehl, president of the City Club, heads the exhibitors' committee whose duties are the arranging of the exhibits. Mrs. Diehl's co-workers are Mrs. Clark Hammond, Miss Lola Walker, Mrs. Munson Marshall, Mrs. Edmund W. Mudge, Mrs. Maud Cummings, Mrs. Winifred F. Perry, Mrs. James W. Scully, Miss Elizabeth Stork, Mrs. Agnes M. House and Miss Dorothy Liggett.

Bishop Mann to End Gospel Lectures

TOMORROW afternoon in St. Peter's Parish House, Fifth and Craft avenues, under auspices of the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary, Bishop Alexander Mann will give his concluding lecture on "The Earliest Gospel," discussing "The Story of the Resurrection: the Lost Ending of the Gospel; the Value of St. Mark Today." The Woman's Auxiliary of St. Andrew's Church will be the hostess group at the tea following. Mrs. Phineas Reynolds, president, will be assisted by Miss Mary Jackson, Mrs. M. W. Lindsay, Mrs. Robert H. King, Mrs. Ralph Montgomery, Mrs. F. E. Anderson, Mrs. Richard Hirsch, Mrs. Charles S. Rea and Mrs. J. H. Musgrave.

Style Hints Given Wilkinsburg Club

"HINTS for the Spring Wardrobe," the subject announced for a talk by Miss E. Perry, brought out a large attendance at the Wilkinsburg Juniors' meeting last Monday evening. Miss Perry showed how the well-dressed woman adapts the mode to her own individuality and type and that this may be done even on a limited income. Miss Elizabeth and Miss Ruth Newell, of Biddle avenue, were hostesses.

Bridgeville Club Hears of Indians

MRS. PHILIP KUSSART, president of the Woman's Historical Society, addressed the Woman's Club of Bridgeville on Tuesday afternoon, speaking on "Prominent Indians of Western Pennsylvania." The program, which was in charge of Mrs. Samuel W. Patton, also included several vocal selections appropriate to Mrs. Kussart's theme, by Miss Ethel Tilley, of Bellevue. Mrs. Edson A. Bailey was hostess.

DRESSES—youthful and feminine—in a versatility of modes, express a modern verve and elegance in the Grabowsky interpretations. FOR TOWN-SPORTS-FORMAL WEAR

There is a dominance of Kasha, Imported Repp and unusual Tweeds for town and sports wear. One sees the influence of Chanel in the collar, and in a few intricately placed tucks. Navy, Black and Beige are prominent, though the Tweeds have those vari-color effects only European woolen designers can accomplish.

Grabowsky custom-tailors have created a number of original models employing Satin, Moravian Crepe and Woolens from Abroad. Fur trimmings are an important feature, especially in the unusual way they are used. Beige Ermine, Sun-ray Mole, Silver Fox, Nude Fox, Black and Ivory Caracul are among the pelts utilized. Colors are spring-like in tone.

COLOR CHIEF NOTE IN NEW SHOE STYLES

Footgear Modes Change With Politics, Haircuts And Waistlines.

"Vanity, vanity . . all is vanity," say the footwear fashions this spring. Women have long loved the beautiful. There's nothing especially new in that. But this year they are becoming more critical of even that beauty than they have ever been before.

Time was when a woman's selection of her shoes depended upon how well they looked on her feet and also upon how comfortable they were. Her feet must look small, even diminutive. And during the process of selection, never for one second did her eye, either literally or figuratively, rest upon any part of her costume above her trim toes! She bought shoes. Yes, just shoes.

But footwear styles have changed, along with politics and haircuts and waistlines. The woman alert to fashion today chooses not just shoes. . .but footwear as a part of her ensemble. As she surveys the several pairs that the affable clerk has arrayed in front of her, she metaphorically keeps one eye on the shoes and the other on the costume with which she will wear them.

JUDGE SHOES BY COMPANY

And then she carries on a characteristic conversation with herself.

"These black lizards are stunning, but how will they look with my new Della Robbia blue chiffon? Only fair. Those pale beige step-in pumps will be absolutely charming with the frock, but they're not quite the shade to wear with my tan ensemble, too. I guess I'd better play safe, and get honey-beige. That rich golden tint harmonizes with whatever I have."

So there you are! Fashion of 1928 judges your shoes by the company they keep.

Never before, probably, have women so consciously watched their complete wardrobe as they do this year. Frock and coat, hat, shoes, gloves, handbag, hose. They're not chosen separately, mind you, but together . . . as the old-fashioned seamstress chose the "findings" for a dress. The material, buttons, silk thread, lining, binding—they all must match.

The parts of our ensembles need not actually match, but they must be on mighty friendly terms! The clever hostess, you know, scans her guest list to be sure that she doesn't seat the hyde-bound Republican with the dyed-in-the-wool Democratic suffragist . . . nor the lover of classics next to the movie fan. The hostess wants animated interest, yes, but not black looks and clenched fists!

MAY BE DISCORDANT NOTE

And so with the ensemble. The wrong shoes can be the single note of discord in an otherwise perfect outfit. If the shoes do not match the frock or coat, then be sure that they repeat the color note of bag or hat.

But don't imagine that you're going to have a difficult time finding the correct footwear. Quite the contrary. Your problem will be that it's hard to decide which is best of a dozen pair that are all perfect! And you'll be tempted to buy four or five pairs when your budget distinctly advises economy.

Fashion magazines for a year or more have been saying, "Two colors are smarter than one," or two fabrics, either. And we've been told all about the slenderizing virtues of a symmetric linea. (How glibly the stylists use that name. Personally, I wish they'd chosen an easier one!)

USE TWO LEATHERS

Well, the whole idea has been adopted by the shoe artists. They're using two leathers instead of one, and two shades instead of one. They give us the ultimate in chic, but at the same time not forgetting that even in this enlightened age, women long for small feet. And the new shoes look small; whatever size-and-a-half is numbered on the inside of the heel. The bottier studies every line, striving for grace in every inch. And the shoes are a veritable triumph in line. In spite of all the seeming intricacies there's a simplicity that is the keynote throughout. The smartness is achieved through interesting combinations of leathers, through exquisite workmanship, through new use of color.

There's the fawny beige suede with strap and narrow piping of trout calf. A black suede has strap, piping and heel of patent leather. (By the way, it is most smart to have the heel match the trimming of the shoe.)

Often the vamp of the shoe will be reptile, while the quarter is fine kid of the same color but a deeper tone. Or the inner side of the shoe is honey-beige suede and the outer half is reptile of a paler shade. (We see life becoming more difficult and problematic for the bootblack!) At other times the heel and saddle of ties is reptile, while kid forms the rest of the parts.

PIPINGS IMPORTANT

Pipings and narrow little bands, or borders of contrasting leather become very important. And the back of the shoe is receiving much more attention than ever before. Do you remember the mother of yesteryear who exclaimed, "Jimmy! Go right back and polish the heels of your shoes; other people see them, whether you do or not!"

And so we are considering the back view. Vanity is a sort of god Janus who looks both ways. A very simple line treatment at the back in a contrasting leather, with matching heels, is decidedly new. And it bids fair to be very popular.

Reptile leathers have made such a fashion hit as hasn't been equaled in many a moon. You'll see them for sports, for street, for evening. In fact, just about every smart foot along the avenues and boulevards is either wearing reptiles, or on its way to buy a pair!

GLORY IN NEW LIZARD

Palm Beach and the Riviera, where spring fashions are pretty definitely predicted, have gloried in the new lizard and trout calf and snakeskin shoes. The entire shoe may be fashioned of the reptile, or there are fashionable combinations with other leathers. These run a pretty good scale of color from white to blue, green, or black.

Fashion has done another particularly nice thing for us this spring in giving us such color in footwear. Cool, delicate shades for street or afternoon. But for sports and evening—gayety. Unbelievable gayety. Giddy gayety.

Beige is most important. And for this the modest purses will rejoice, for beige is practical. Almost any of the fashionable costume colors may add beige shoes, and be entirely correct. The ensemble may be in tans—then wear beige shoes. The frock may be a soft blue—then wear beige shoes. The afternoon dress of lace, the billiard green georgette, the Della Robbia blue—any of these combine well with beige.

NEW BLUE SHOES

But often there's another color, too, that is just one whit smarter and newer. For instance, have you seen the new dark blue shoes? If you have a navy and white costume this spring, then beyond the shadow of a doubt, the blue shoes are a flattering compliment and complement to them.

But the vogue that is growing by leaps and bounds is the one for having the satin or moire shoes dyed to match the frock. The canny young debutante wasn't long in learning that she was just about twice as attractive on the ballroom floor if her "light fantastic toe" happened to be encased in brightness.

The new Chinese red frock dips its ripply hemline down to almost touch the Chinese red Cinderella slippers. Or a black lace gown with a peacock back wears purple shoes. Yes, purple! And a fluttery blue chiffon wears matching shoes . . . while an off-white taffeta may affect sophistication in bright green slippers.

GALAXY OF COLORS

If the proverbial mouse might browse around under the bridge and tea tables, it would report a veritable galaxy of beiges, blues, greens, pearl luster.

The spectator sportswoman may indulge her love of color to her heart's content. The shops are showing new woven sandals that are something to dream about! Black-and-white, green-and-white, tan-and-green, blue-and-white. Almost any combinations. The weaving of the colors is, for all the world, just like the little kindergartners do when they weave their red and green strips of paper into little mats. Usually the vamp of the shoe is woven, while the back is kid of plain matching color.

Every fashion prediction points to printed linen and printed silk shoes. The Indian prints that have been successful in sports frocks are wonderfully colorful in the shoes. And there are new embroidered linens joining the color forces.

These shoes may match the sweater costume, or they may match the dashing scarf flipping in the breeze. Some women are wearing the suit in neutral tone, but bright shoes, hat and belt. The semi-sports silk frocks use the silk or linen shoes to carry out a definite ensemble feeling.

STRAPS PRETTIER

Straps are prettier this year than they have been for a long time. They're so delightfully narrow and graceful, making the ankle seem slender. You'll find just the conventional straps, or T-shaped straps that are quite new and decidedly smart. Sometimes three or four straps intertwine to form a graceful motif on the instep.

Buckles, too, are a bit different this year. They've followed the cue of more femininity, and are smaller and daintier than heretofore, especially for street wear. Gold or silver is used. It is easy to wear costume jewelry to harmonize with these buckles, and entirely correct.

Fancy cut-outs on the vamp of the shoe are much worn. Sometimes these use leather of lighter or darker tone underneath—or are left open, especially in the sports type of shoe.

Of course there's always the question of "Are these shoes the right style for sports?" Or, "Are those pumps correct for afternoon?"

GREAT LATITUDE

The spectator at the sports event has great latitude. She may wear oxfords or strap slippers, preferably with Cuban heels. But the variety of the oxfords is utterly intriguing. Here you find those delightful woven shoes in two or three colors—and fans combined with white, black with white, to harmonize with accessories.

The leathers are usually reptile, calf, suede, woven kid, straw, linen or buckskin. If you can't be pleased in all that selection, then what would you have?

FOOTWEAR FOR EVENING NOT BUILT FOR SCUFFING

The Middle Atlantic Shoe Retailers' Association advises shoe buyers that:

"Consumers of present-day woman's footwear demand materials of the finest texture—light, airy and delicate.

"Patent leather is an enameled process, therefore it is impossible to determine whether it will break, crack or check until it is worn.

"Footwear made of fabrics, especially satin, is built for dress wear only.

"Shoe dealers will not be responsible for wear of the above types of footwear.

"Leather footwear is not water-proof. It should be protected in rainy or damp weather by rubbers. When wet or damp it should not be placed near fire or heat to dry. By so doing, life is taken from the leather, causing it to become brittle and break.

"We emphasize fairness—to merchant, manufacturer and consumer alike."

East End Girl Weds In Church

THE marriage of Miss Mary Louise Fawcett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis P. Fawcett, of Callowhill street, and Richard Owens Ludebuehl, was solemnized last night in the Highland Presbyterian Church by the Rev. Dr. George C. Fisher. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was gowned in ivory satin trimmed with rose point and duchesse lace, and fashioned with a full court train lined with flesh-tinted chiffon. Her veil of tulle edged with lace was caught with a coronet of duchesse lace and orange blossoms, and she carried a shower of orchids, white lilacs and lilies of the valley.

Miss Janette Wright, maid of honor, and Mrs. Lewis P. Fawcett, II, of Providence, R. I., matron of honor, wore light coral satin made with an uneven hem line and side train, and they carried spring flowers. Frocks of deep coral satin were worn by the bridesmaids, Miss Elizabeth Humphreys, of Philadelphia; Miss Ruth McCauley, of Beaver; Miss Martha Brahm and Miss Eleanor Williams, of Pittsburgh, and they, also, carried spring flowers. Bradway Brown, of Moorestown, N. J., was best man and the ushers included Henry McAllister, of Denver; Horace Roberts, of Moorestown; Lewis P. Fawcett, II, of Providence; Norman E. Wynn, Jack H. Miller and Albert Ludebuehl, of this city.

A reception and dinner at the Rittenhouse followed the ceremony, the bridal table being decorated with spring flowers and tall candles.

A number of parties have been given recently for the bride, and among those who entertained were Mrs. Lewis P. Fawcett, II, Miss Brahm, Miss Williams and Miss Wright.

Keep Your Skin Young

To restore skin health and natural beauty use regularly a little pure mercolized wax, obtainable at any drug store. When used as directed, the wax thoroughly cleanses the face by peeling off the entire outer skin with all grime, coarseness and blemishes. The under skin is then revealed clear, smooth, white, with the youthful beauty of a girl. Mercolized wax brings out the hidden beauty. To quickly remove wrinkles and age lines, use as face lotion 1 ounce saxolite and 1 half pint witch hazel.

Banquet For Club Leaders

THE annual dinner for the presidents of affiliated clubs is scheduled at the Congress of Clubs for next Wednesday evening. As hostesses there will be Mrs. C. A. Brooks, Mrs. Sylvester Snee and Mrs. Sherman Massingham, and on the program will appear Mrs. Carolyn Himelblau, who, with Mrs. Grace Blenko Martin at the piano, will give "a Russian Revery" in costume. Violin solos will be contributed by Charles Riley.

Mrs. Chester P. Johnston, chairman of the Congress drama department, announces her program for the luncheon meeting Thursday. Miss Helen Irwin will read a one-act play and Queenie Smith and Charles Purcell, of the "Hit the Deck" company, will be guests. The study class, under the leadership of Mrs. E. B. Roberts, will discuss "Diplomacy." The play-writing group will meet tomorrow to hear Mrs. Sarah C. Pettit read her play "The Secret Play" and also the sketch, "We Nominate," by Dr. Luba Robin Goldsmith. The radio program on Tuesday morning will consist of a program of children's stories by Mrs. Neva Morris.

Try Losing 20 Lbs.

No Starvation No Abnormal Exercise

Learn what it means to be slender. What it means in new beauty, new health and vitality. You will always be glad that you know.

Wherever you look you can see that people have found a new way to reduce. Excess fat, once so common, is the exception now. Find out that scientific method in justice to yourself.

That way is embodied in Marmola prescription tablets. People have used them for 20 years—millions of boxes of them. The slender figures which prevail today are largely due to that.

The use of Marmola requires no abnormal exercise or diet, though moderation helps. Simply take four tablets daily until the excess disappears. Every box contains the formula and the reasons for results, so you will have no fear of harm. The effects are due to a substance which Nature employs in the body to turn food into fuel and energy rather than into fat. It is the result of wide research and experiment by scientific men.

If you overweigh, you owe yourself a trial of the help that has done so much. Take Marmola for a while and watch the change that comes. All the results will delight you, we believe. Order now, before you forget it. When reduction is so easy, why stay fat?

Marmola prescription tablets are sold by all druggists at $1 per box. If your druggist is out, he will get them at once from his jobber.

THE SUNDAY SUN-TELEGRAPH

SUNDAY, MARCH 25, 1928

Over the Liberty Bridge -:- -:- -:- -:- A Sun-Telegraph Motorlogue

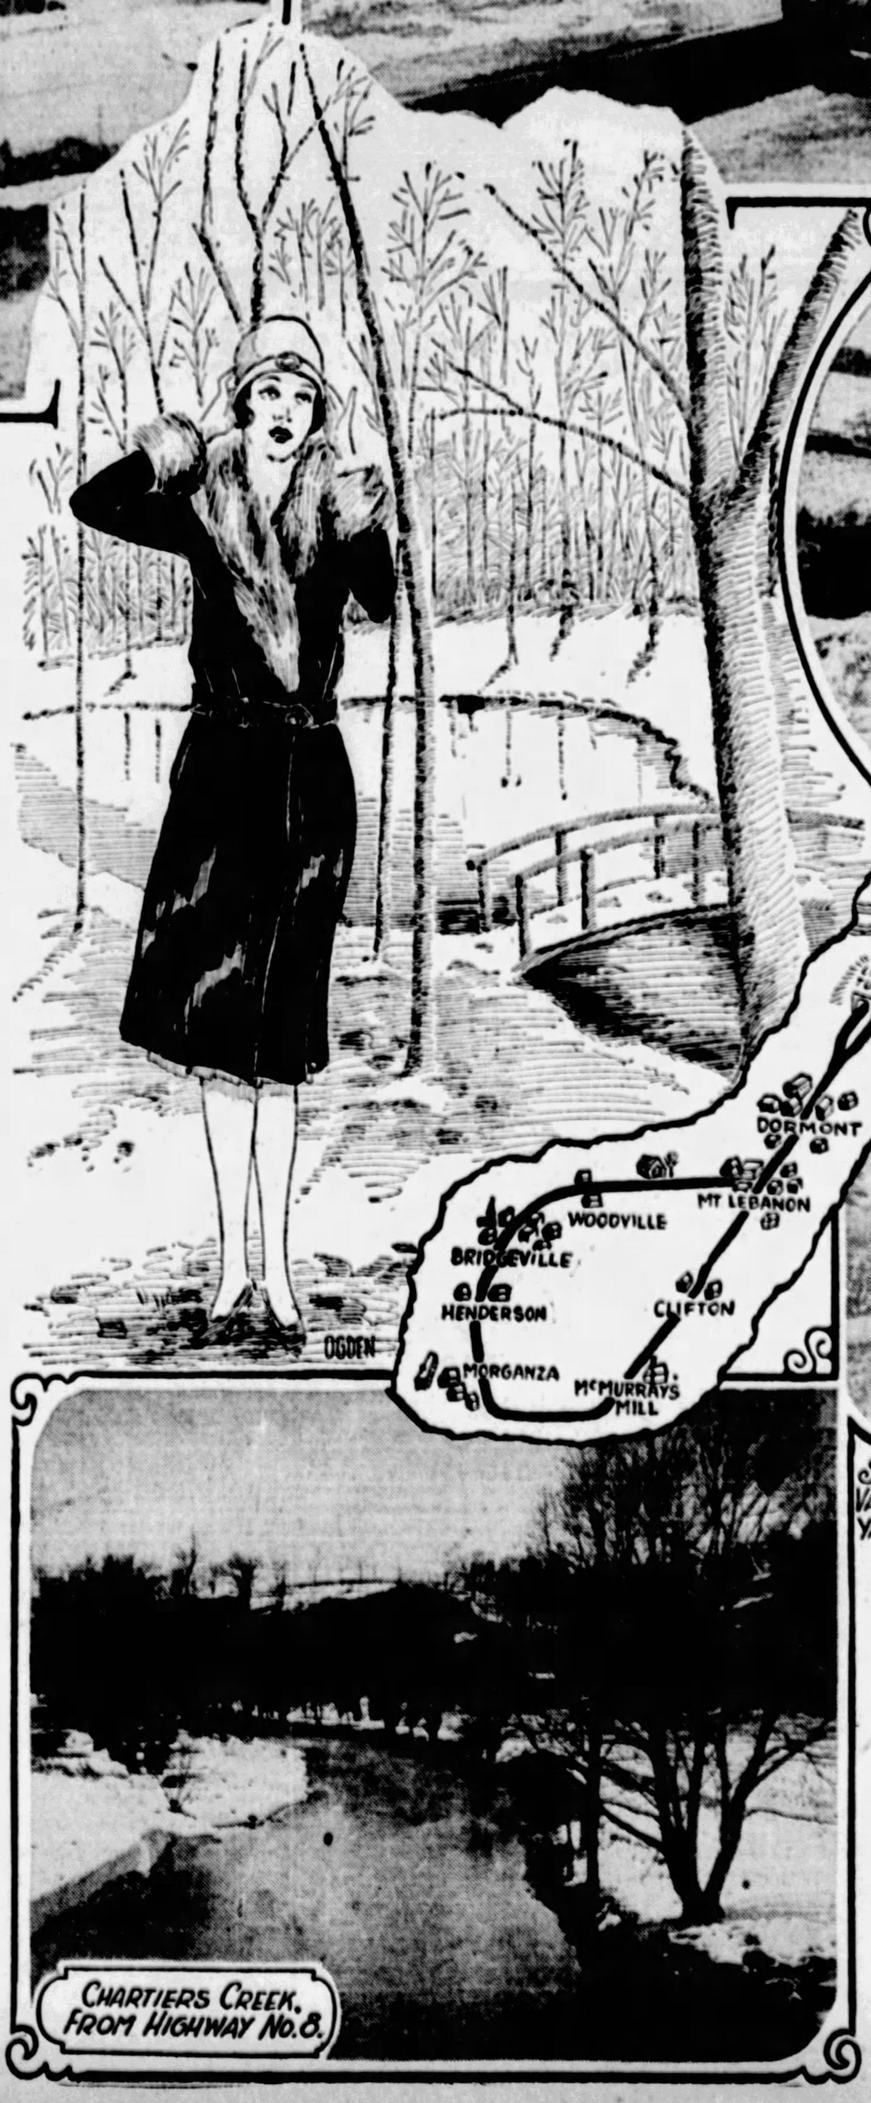
Spring is here and the open road once again beckons the motorist, his family and his friends. The Sunday Sun-Telegraph herewith presents the first of a series of motorlogues which will continue throughout the Spring, Summer and Fall months. In a 38-mile trip from The Sun-Telegraph building to lands of Southern Allegheny and Northern Washington counties, unsurpassed in scenic beauty and historic interest, and including a section of Western Pennsylvania's most famous farming country, the motorist for the first time will cross the new Liberty Bridge, which opens to traffic Tuesday. The scout car used to map this trip was a Hudson seven-passenger Landau, from the Pierpoint Motor Company.

LITTLE CHARTIERS CREEK, NEAR SNODGRASS.

GOLDEN TRIANGLE, FROM LIBERTY BRIDGE.

ROAD SCENE, NEAR MORGANZA.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH, OLDEST CHURCH IN CHARTIERS VALLEY. MANY OF REVOLUTIONARY FAME BURIED IN CHURCH YARD.



CHARTIERS CREEK, FROM HIGHWAY NO. 8.

Historic Landmarks Abound Along Route

By THE TOURING MOTORIST

The new Liberty Bridge, which will be opened to traffic Tuesday, makes it easy-going for the motorist to reach one of the most historic portions of Allegheny county and a district that in scenic beauty is unsurpassed in Western Pennsylvania. A circular drive about 38 miles over the hills and through the vales on the southern borders of this county and the northern townships of Washington county traverses a region that was settled before the Revolutionary War, and some of the pioneer dwellings of logs and the later mansions of red brick are still to be seen across the meadows and through vistas of stately trees.

The route leads from the Sun-Telegraph Building, over Sixth avenue, across the new bridge, through the Liberty tubes and in a general direction directly southward a little more than 15 miles and may be driven leisurely in two hours with some opportunity for the person at the wheel to view the beautiful country. Emerging from the south end of the tubes the roadway spans Little Sawmill Run, a stream so named when the British occupied Ft. Pitt and designated as a landmark for property sold under the Virginia grants of Augusta county. After the drive through the first vehicular tunnel of its kind in the world motorists will notice that their eyes will blink in the brilliant light of the southern hills where the air is clear and the effect is noticeable to those who have been accustomed to the dull atmosphere of the downtown city.

THROUGH TOWERING HILLS

Continuing straight ahead in West Liberty avenue is like traveling through a western canyon. Hills 200 feet high tower up on either hand, but on the sides of these human habitations strive to hold on to the precipitous sides along with the rocks and trees. (Let not the motorist be discouraged by a stretch of rough pavement. As soon as he crosses the city boundary into Dormont borough he finds a perfect road, and this he will enjoy during the remainder of his trip.)

In Dormont an altitude of more than 1,000 feet above sea level is reached, and in Mt. Lebanon, just beyond, the route reaches a point exceeding 1,300 feet above the sea, and looking southwestward the summits of hills 10 miles away are visible. Here is Pittsburgh's newest high-class residence suburb—a city in population and wealth, but still ruled as a township by a board of commissioners.

The highway we travel here is the Old Washington road—and the term "old" is part of the name—for this was a highway when the town of Washington, Pa., was called Catfish Camp. About 100 years ago stage coaches were operated over this road, as well as on the Washington pike, which runs through Greentree and Carnegie. Down into the valley of Panther's run and up on the hills again, and then down a wide valley of farms brings the tourist to the tiny village of Clifton.

OLD AS PITTSBURGH

Clifton is as old as incorporated Pittsburgh. In the old days it was called "Sodom," for the fact that

M'MURRAY ROAD, through to McMurray's Mill, 14.8 miles. Continue on over brick road through Snodgrass trolley stop, crossing Little Chartiers Creek, coming in sight of Morganza Industrial School straight ahead in distance, to HIGHWAY No. 8, 19.5 miles; turn sharply to right, follow alternate stretches of concrete and brick paving, cross Chartiers Creek, and follow through to

RICKENBACKER FINDS OUTLOOK ENCOURAGING

Executive Impressed by Possibilities Transportation Offers in Unlocking Resources

DETROIT, March 24.—A first-hand picture of the business condition relative to the public's need and ability to purchase motor cars was given the automobile industry by Capt. Edward V. Rickenbacker last week on his return from a seven-week trip through the West.

His analysis was summed up in the few words:

"Prospects for the immediate future in the West and Southwest I find remarkably encouraging. But what impressed me most in my travels is what future transportation is going to do in unlocking the resources of the country."

VISITING IN EAST

Capt. Rickenbacker left almost immediately for a similar tour of one-night stands throughout the eastern section of the country.

The tours are primarily made in his new capacity as assistant general sales manager of the Cadillac Motor Car Company in charge of La Salle sales.

His stops in a city each day were given over to an analysis of conditions with a view toward learning the communities' ability to absorb automobiles and to addressing a meeting of members of his own organization in that city.

The encouraging feature of the automobile industry today is that the greatly mounting production totals and consequently increasing sales are causing more interest in the development of the automobile.

LARGE RESEARCH STAFFS

The history of the industry has been that when sales were as good as they are now engineering departments were laid off and development work stopped. Today every company in the industry is employing a larger engineering staff than it did one year ago and when sales were considerably lower than today.

Only a very few companies are experimenting with radical changes in automobile design. The most outstanding change in design that is being given se- ous consideration is the front wheel drive.

Only one manufacturer has progressed in the extent of having actually built up experimental cars of this type in this country.

There is considerable work being done on small eight-cylinder motor cars. This experimental work suggests that this number of cylinders is receiving even greater consideration than it did a year ago. What the results of these experiments in eight-cylinder cars for quantity production purposes will be, will be known within two or three years.

95, Woman Enjoying 1,500-Mile Auto Trip

ATLANTA, Ga., March 24.—At the age of 95, Mrs. John E. Alexander started on a 1,500-mile automobile trip from Atlanta with as much enthusiasm and anticipation as she did when she made the first trip over the Pennsylvania Railroad, 67 years ago.

"Why, I traveled from coast to coast a few years ago, visiting relatives—and alone, too," said Mrs. Alexander. "I came to Atlanta alone last December from my home in Springfield, Mass., to visit my granddaughter. This is my sixth visit to Atlanta.

"I like to travel, whether it is by train or auto, and I am looking forward with as much eagerness to the Florida trip as I did at the age of 18, when I traveled over the Pennsylvania Railroad just after it was opened."

"What is your recipe for longevity?" she was asked.

"Well, I might mention that I take a cold sponge bath every morning when I arise. And I like to walk. Regular habits, no worries, finding an interest in things about you. These are things that make the years come lightly," she explained.

Safety Council Organizing Ninth Safe Drivers' Class

FOUR LECTURES IN SERIES TO OPEN THURSDAY

Jurist, Police and Auto Club Officers to Come Here as Speakers—Open to All.

Judging from advance reports, the ninth annual safety lecture course conducted under the auspices of the Safe Drivers' Club of the Western Pennsylvania Division, National Safety Council, will be a record one. The course opens Thursday night at 7:45 o'clock in the auditorium of the Chamber of Commerce. The second lecture will be given on April 4, the third on April 11 and the last on April 18, bringing the sessions to a close on April 21 with a program of an hour and a half duration, to be broadcast over radio station WCAE.

H. O. Rounds, of the Detroit Automobile Club, will be the feature speaker at the first meeting, his subject being "Has the Time Arrived for an Awakening of a Community Spirit for Traffic Law Observance?" Entertainment for the first meeting will be furnished by the Duquesne Light Company.

"Traffic Accident Prevention in Practice Coupled with 'Common Sense Driving" will be the subject of the talk at the second gathering, to be given by Joseph Husson, president of the Eleto Company, New York. The entertainment will be provided by the Pittsburgh Railways Company.

Judge Lawrence C. Fish, who presides in the traffic court in Brooklyn, will address the school at the third meeting, with his topic, "Is Strict Traffic Law Enforcement Necessary to Community Safety?" Judge Fish has a reputation for being the nemesis of traffic law violators and is said to be a powerful speaker. The Yellow Cab Company will furnish the entertainment for this meeting, which will be attended by city officials.

W. C. Price, captain of the State Highway Patrol, will speak at the final meeting on "Interpreting the New State Code in Terms of Observance for Safety." The Green Cab Company will provide the entertainment.

Plans for the radio program are still in the making. There will be several prominent speakers and entertainment from local theaters. The program will get under way at 9 o'clock and end at 10:30 o'clock.

Enrollment in the safe drivers' school is open to all motor and other vehicle drivers, fleet owners, garage superintendents and others. There are no fees or formal entrance requirements and diplomas are awarded those attending three of the first four meetings. Attendance prizes are given at each meeting. The course is carried out with the co-operation of the better traffic committee, the automobile clubs, the Automobile Dealers' Association, the Team and Truck Owners' Association, the public utilities and fleet owners.

Carrying Out American Idea

AUTOMOTIVELY— The five-passenger sedan is a popular Lincoln design for family use, combining as it does practical utility with excellence in charm of appointments. Although designed to seat five, it has accommodations for two additional passengers.

Studebaker Company Nears Goal of Million

With a volume of business recorded for the first three weeks of March that exceeds the total of any previous month, the Studebaker Sales Company of Pittsburgh's million dollar March sales campaign is progressing at a rate that assures its success, reports P. L. Dennis, president.

The Studebaker Company has organized its employes into two armies, the Red and the Green, for the campaign, and more than a hundred prizes will be distributed among the leading contestants at a celebration to be staged early in April.

At a celebration staged by the Green army a week ago when it passed the Red army for the first time in the campaign, effigies of the Red army leaders were paraded about the salesrooms. Interest of the two armies in the campaign is being held at a high point because of the promise of a banquet for the winning group, and beans for the vanquished.

ORCHESTRA GUEST OF PUGH

The famous Goodrich Silvertown Orchestra, with its mysterious masked tenor, received a royal welcome from Pittsburgh music lovers during the past week, the great organization under the direction of Joseph Knecht seeming to grow more popular season after season.

The visit of the Silvertowners was featured by a unique parade sponsored by the Pugh Payment Plan and one of the largest retailers of Goodrich Silvertowns in the country. The destination of the Pugh parade was the Marine Hospital, where disabled veterans of the world war were treated to some of the orchestra's best known numbers. As a side show to the entertainment, more than 300 toy Silvertown balloons, each bearing a ticket good for a prize at the Pugh Tire Company stores, were released in the air. Among the large number of prize tickets since redeemed was a letter from E. W. Mackell, Emelenton, Pa., in which he writes: "The enclosed balloon was forced down by rain at 5 p. m. today. I would say that it is approximately 75 miles from here to your establishment." The little balloon had been in the air nearly two days and was then forced down by rain.

MOTOR TESTS REO ENGINE

The stealthy tread of the Bengal tiger embodies the application of quiet power, but this power is of little use to humanity. Power, both quietly-applied and useful as well, is found in the modern automobile engine, especially when the engine is scientifically checked for exact performance, as is done on the electric dynamometers at the Reo factory.

A big electric generator first acts as a motor, driving the engine to free up the parts and insure smooth running. Then the ignition is turned on and the engine begins to run under its own power, generating electrical current, and forcing it back into the factory circuits, to help operate the electrical machinery that is building still other engines. After several hours running, the dynamometer is shut down. The engine is thoroughly inspected and is then disconnected from the dynamometer and run at various speeds to see that it is 100 per cent up to standard.

After the test run, the engine goes to an assembly line, where the clutch and transmission are installed and from there it is taken to another dynamometer, where it is tested as a unit, the gears having been given a previous test.

FALCON RAISES CAR SCHEDULES

DETROIT, March 24.—Demand for the 1928 Falcon-Knight sixes has necessitated increased car building schedules at the company's plant in Elyria, O., according to a statement made here this week by officials of the Falcon Motor Corporation.

Employment likewise has been increased at the Falcon-Knight plant, the personnel being 80 per cent larger than at any stage during 1927, the company's initial year in the automotive industry.

Steady production is now being maintained to keep pace with orders for Falcon-Knight six-cylinder sedans, coaches and coupe models. Plans also are being made to steadily increase this production since equipment has been added that will double the daily capacity.

In its first year the Falcon Motors Corporation set a notable sales record for a new company and has built up a dealer organization that covers every important trade center of the nation. The company also has materially strengthened its standing in the export field with an outstanding dealership representation abroad.

ORDERS MOUNT FOR PEERLESS

CLEVELAND, March 24.—Peerless production figures, which have been mounting steadily since the introduction of the new 1928 models, show that the month of March will probably hit a new high mark for the Cleveland company.

In spite of this fact, unfilled orders from dealers and distributors continue to pile up rapidly. Already they are far ahead of this time last year.

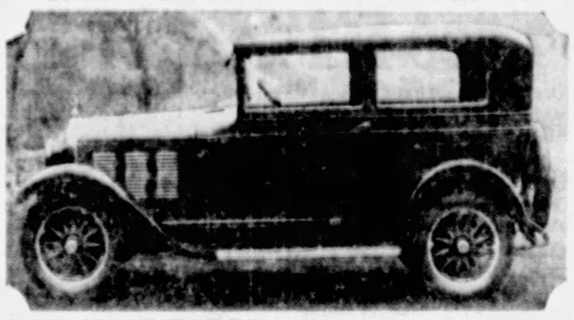
Charles A. Tucker, general sales manager of the Peerless Motor Car Corporation, who has just returned from the Boston automobile show, brought with him from the east a great many orders.

Mr. Tucker is most optimistic regarding Peerless and the general demand for automobiles this spring.

"Conditions in the wheat belt and the corn belt are better than they have been in many years," he says. "General business has shown more life and better fundamental conditions than at any time for the last eight months.

"With production figures far in advance of anything Peerless has ever known, and with orders in excess of production, the outlook is certainly most encouraging."

Among the Conspicuous



FOR SMARTNESS— This two-door sedan of the 1928 Falcon-Knight line is among those cars most conspicuous for their smartness. Its low lines are enchanced by the horizontal hood louvres, full crowned fenders and a cadet type sun visor.

Gas Tax Proposed To Check U. S. Cars

"England is in favor of a gas tax because it may tend to keep out the American cars," declared Sidney von Lossecke, manager of the touring department of the Automobile Legal Association. "How? The American cars are of higher power than the English cars, and necessarily consume more gasoline. It is on this point principally, that the advocates of the gas tax in England are basing their argument," he said.

FAMED LANDS ALONG ROUTE

two taverns flourished here. One of these ancient hostelries is still standing, but its long log galleries are not recognized in its weatherboarding and white paint. Here the motorist leaves the Washington road and turns sharply to the left on concrete and enters the new McMurray road, one of the newest and best of the county's highway improvements.

Here is an easy grade nearly a mile in length. Its summit is opposite the peak of Rocky Ridge, with an altitude of 1,440 feet, the highest point in Allegheny county. The county line is crossed just beyond and McMurray's Mills is the first village passed in Washington county. At the left of the road before crossing the bridge may be seen the remains of the old mill dam. The mill of pioneer days was burned down in 1864 and the present mill was erected about 60 years ago. It also was operated by water power, but its machinery now is driven by a gasoline engine.

The next few miles is like riding a huge roller-coaster. The scenery embraces Washington county's famed farmlands at their best. Far on the right is the wood-covered Mt. Blaine and on the left the prairie-like valley of Little Chartiers creek. Crossing the picturesque stream on a narrow bridge the road continues on to its intersection with State Highway No. 8, which may be recognized by the banded poles.

PASS EARLY BATTLEGROUND

In the distance across Chartiers Creek may be seen the buildings of the Industrial School at Morganza. The farm was named for Col. John Morgan, agent for George Washington who held extensive tracts of land in this region. Turning sharply to the right into State Highway No. 8, the motorist now begins his return journey to Pittsburgh. The view from the bridge over the winding Chartiers at this point never will be forgotten. Traveling northward there are many beautiful vistas to the right beyond the Chartiers. Cross the creek twice at Bridgeville, pass the Mayer flying field on the left and at Woodville, after crossing the railroad, the battleground of the Whisky Insurrection of 1794 is passed.

St. Luke's Episcopal Church of Chartiers, on the left just beyond Woodville, is the oldest church in the valley. In the burial ground in the shadows of the little stone chapel and its great trees lie many Revolutionary ancestors of the early settlers of this region. Another climb begins, but on easy grades. Turn to the right in the Cochran road and follow it to the summit of the grade, where the Pittsburgh-bound traveler turns to the left in the Bower Hill road. Here is Mt. Lebanon again. Entering the Old Washington road, turn to the left and the remainder of the trip back through the tubes and over the Liberty bridge will be on a familiar course.

IT'S FLEXIBLE—The car pictured here, say Samson Motor Company officials, is one that can be utilized for any purpose, business or recreation, because of the seat built in the rear. It is the Chrysler "62" coupe.

Portugal to Allow Light Automobiles

A Portuguese order of January 17, 1928, permits the importation of automobiles, open or closed, of any kind, for the transportation of passengers, weighing up to 1,400 kilos, when complete, with a weight tolerance of 5 per cent. In the distribution of the annual contingent of 250 automobiles and 100 chassis of the cars weighing 1,500 kilos or more, no distinction is to be made between chassis and complete automobiles unless this results in any lessening in the number of complete automobiles permitted under the contingent.

ONE LICENSE IN NINE STATES

Nine states require only one license plate on an automobile.

Instead of a plate on rear and front of the car, as is required in California. The following states require only a rear license plate: Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kansas, North Carolina, South Carolina, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Mississippi.

Improved Carburetion Increasing New Car Mileage

COMPRESSION, BETTER FUELS, SPEED MOTORS

Owner Should Learn to Manipulate Controls to Get Greatest Efficiency.

By an AUTOMOTIVE ENGINEER

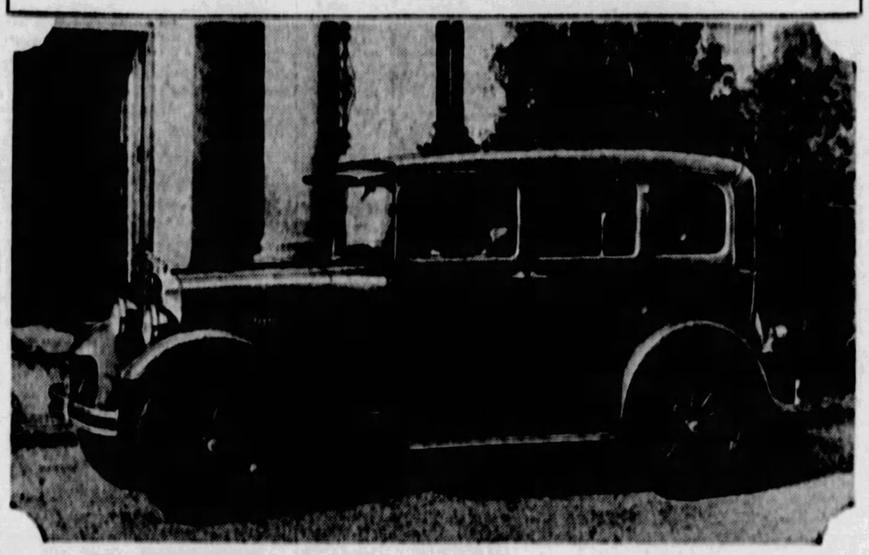
Besides better gasoline and higher compression there are other factors that are contributing to the improved mileage a gallon of gasoline obtained by the new cars. Primarily, good fuel economy is achieved through good carburetion. The proper mixing of the fuel and air is what makes it possible to get the utmost possible power out of each explosion, and this is just another way of measuring economy.

There are certain characteristics about new motors and their carburetors which distinguish them from the older types. One hardly ever sees on the new motors the long intake pipe from the carburetor to the manifold. The carburetor today is higher and very close to the intake, which is often cored into the cylinder block to a much greater extent than formerly. Of course the object is to prevent the recondensation of the gasoline after it has been vaporized and mixed with the air.

Another feature of the new manifolds is that they are designed to keep the gas in a constant state of motion after it is drawn from the carburetor. The continuous agitation of the gas helps to prevent condensation and at the same time it promotes the homogenity of the mixture. In plain English this means that a sample of the mixture would contain the same quantity of air and gasoline no matter from what part of the manifold it were drawn.

On some of the new cars the richness of the mixture and the heat control is within the hands of the owner. It takes a little practice and skill for the owner to get the most out of the carburetor when he is new at handling these controls, but when the skill is gained it makes it possible not only to get greater mileage out of the car to the gallon of gasoline, but actually to improve the performance considerably.

A New American Edition



CALLED ERSKINE—This four-door sedan, companion to the Studebaker line of cars, the new American edition of the Erskine six, has been rapidly winning nation-wide approval at automobile shows, information received here advises.

Double Road Fund To Care for Autos

European nations might be inclined to envy our American highway system with its 3,000,000 miles of paved roads, and, as a matter of fact, we are not exactly ashamed of it ourselves.

But if every registered automobile in the United States were to be taken out tomorrow and if these cars were to be distributed equally over the 3,000,000 miles of road, a traffic congestion would result which would approximate the conditions of a holiday jam.

The inadequacy of American highways and a transportation problem which has been created by a registration of 23,000,000 motor vehicles were pointed out by H. H. Brooks, general sales director of the Marmon Motor Car Company.

"It is difficult to visualize 23,000,000 automobiles," said Mr. Brooks, "but the significance of this amazing registration can be better appreciated when we are told that if all these cars were to be started at once and scattered mile highway system, each would have a headway of only about 45 yards.

"Highway mileage figures are a bit misleading. For while the aggregate mileage is impressive, there is a total of only 600,000 miles of surfaced roads outside the paved streets of our larger cities. This begins to look as if our highways were approaching the flood stage—the saturation point.

"Highway improvement and development in 1927 cost us $1,250,000,000—a sum that rather takes the breath away. But if we are to realize the value of the automobile and derive the full health-giving benefits from the gas-driven vehicle; if we are to enjoy the open road and the open country instead of using our cars merely as taxicabs, we shall have to double our appropriations for hard roads and for wider highways."

SPORT SENIOR LATEST DODGE

According to an official announcement received from the factory at Detroit by Frank D. Saupp, local Dodge Brothers dealer, a new sport type Senior Cabriolet roadster is now in production and shipments are going forward to dealers as rapidly as possible.

The new car is equipped with wire wheels, the two spares being carried on the sides, resting in wells in the fenders and held in place by nickeled brackets extending from the cowl. It is an attractive companion car to the Dodge Senior sport sedan introduced in January.

The rumble seat which affords comfortable accommodation for two extra passengers is upholstered in the same fine genuine leather used in the front compartment. The rumble seat cushion and back are both built over spring frames and ample leg room is provided.

NASH DOUBLES EXPORT TRADE

KENOSHA, Wis., March 24—Export shipments of the Nash Motors Company have more than doubled in the last two years. For the fiscal year of 1927 the company's export shipments showed a gain of 37.5 per cent over shipments for the fiscal year of 1926. In this connection it is pointed out that the average increase in export shipments from the United States for the entire automobile industry last year was 17 per cent.

Chrysler Captures Australian Records

Chrysler's long series of impressive triumphs in foreign racing events was carried auspiciously into 1928 by the capture of two Australian records in the month of January, information received at company's Detroit headquarters indicate.

As a result of these two victories, all interstate records in both Australia and New Zealand are now held by Chrysler cars, the information added.

The latest achievements consisted of a run of 591 miles from Adelaide to Melbourne in 11 hours and 49 minutes on January 13, and one of 576 miles from Sydney to Melbourne in 10 hours and 42 minutes on January 31.

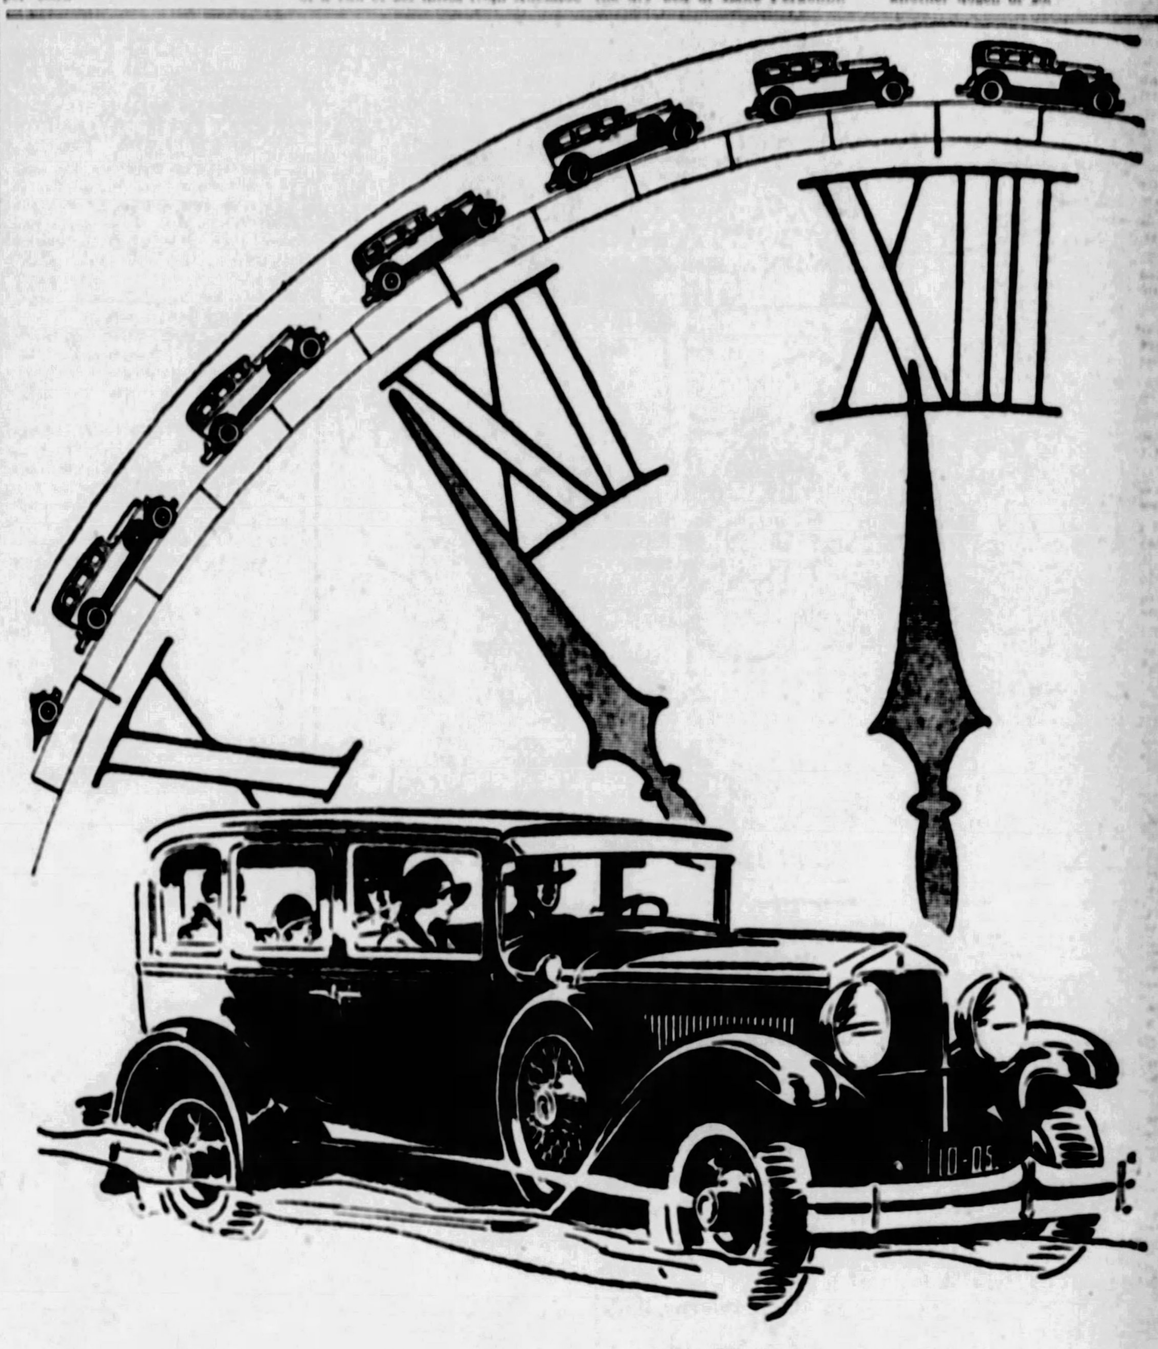
Among other feats which have given its cars high prestige in the Antipodes Chrysler holds the Australian 24-hour record and all speed records up to 1,000 miles through the spectacular drive made by William Attwood and A. H. Colliver in a "70" two-seater last August over the dry bed of Lake Perkolilli.

BANKER BOASTS 13TH OAKLAND

Emil Greger, retired farmer and banker of Waterville, Minn., is believed to be America's leading "one-car man."

Others have owned more automobiles than Mr. Greger, but available records shows none who has owned more automobiles of one make.

Each year, for 13 consecutive years, Mr. Greger has purchased an Oakland automobile. "They're getting better every year," he says. "I believe I'll stick with them for another dozen or so."



To Produce Quality —Economically

GRAHAM PAIGE

In preparing for the new line of Graham-Paige motor cars—several additional units were erected at the main factory; one entirely new plant was purchased, much new equipment installed. This was necessary because we believe that it is not alone enough to build well, but equally important to build efficiently and economically.

SHOW GOES MARCHING ON

Overloaded Trucks Ruin Our Highways

ONE is likely to blame the big truck for smashing up the highway.

Sometimes it is to blame, but the real cause of road damage when this is done by trucks is overloading.

The thing that makes the hole in the roadbed is the amount of unsprung weight in relation to the width of the tires.

In other words, a light delivery wagon carrying three tons of lead would do a lot of damage, while a five-ton truck properly loaded wouldn't do any damage at all to a concrete, brick or asphalt highway.

The principle is the same as that of a hammer and chisel. If you hit a light blow on the handle of a sharp chisel it will drive the metal into a block of wood much faster than a heavier blow hit on the handle of a very dull chisel. A light truck overloaded comes down heavily on the narrow wheels and tires and drives them into the road surface—while the big trucks are built to carry the load. Of course, if a big truck also is overloaded it does terrific damage, and that sometimes happens.

In Connecticut the authorities have been doing some checking up on the percentage of trucks which are carrying more tonnage than they were supposed to. Nearly one-third of the trucks traveling on the highways were found to be overloaded.

When one realizes that a great many trucks are coming back from errands, carrying no load at all, the 30 per cent figure is high.

The heaviest offenders were the 2½-ton trucks. The owners of these vehicles apparently thought they had a heavy enough truck to be able to carry big loads, and they put four and five tons of materials on these machines which were built to carry only 2½ tons.

In Connecticut the authorities have been very busy driving these overloaded trucks off the highways. The practice is to make a truck stop immediately and unload the extra weight of its product by the roadside, with directions to come back for it later.

Whether the operator saves or loses money, he should not be permitted to indulge in this practice which breaks down the roads at the expense of the public.

Holaday Highway Bill Provides Motoring Boons

WIDE ROADS, hard-surfaced roads, high roads and good roads, in and around all cities, up and down this country and all the way across it, mean various things to everyone.

First—They suggest more automobiles, and that means the manufacturing and the selling of more cars, adding prosperity to prosperity.

Second—They mean the lowering of transportation costs, bugaboo of the American business man today.

The inventive genius of America has whipped the manufacturing problems of the country. The transportation job of getting things quickly from where they are to where you want them is still unsolved.

Experts inform us that better roads, wider roads, harder roads and higher roads will help.

Twenty-three months ago, on February 2, 1926, there was introduced in Congress a measure known as the Holaday Bill.

The Holaday Bill provides for the construction, maintenance and regulation within and by the United States of America of a nation-wide system of durable, hard-surfaced post roads and a provision for the payment of their cost.

The leading features of the Holaday Bill provide that a c cted and comprehensive system of hard-surfaced roads s be built by the United States with these qualifications:

1. They should be built immediately.
2. They should be as straight as is practical.
3. They should be built of the best hard-surfaced type of roadbed available.

Additional details suggest that this transcontinental hard-surfaced highway be not less than 18 feet wide and at least 40 feet in width within 20 miles of the corporate limits of all cities over 200,000 in population.

Such a project will be a boon to commercial and pleasure motoring and worth every cent it entails. It should have first consideration.

Arizona Loop Trip

ONE of the most interesting loop-trips in Arizona is the one from Phoenix via the Apache Trail to Globe, returning via the mining camps of Miami and Superior, according to the touring department of the National Automobile Club.

The Apache Trail proper starts at the Apache Junction, 34 miles east of Phoenix, on United States highway No. 80. Leaving Phoenix excellent pavement is followed through a section of green farms, fruit groves and orchards.

The route passes the site of the ruins of the first flour mill of the early pioneers; Arizona's National Monument, the Papago Sahuaro National Park, and past the University of Arizona experimental farm to Mesa. At this point is located the million-dollar Mormon Temple, recently completed.

A few miles east of the city Superstition Mountain comes into view. This ghost-like mountain is aptly named, rising abruptly out of the desert and marking the scene of one of the most cold-blooded Indian massacres in history. Indian fought Indian, and to this day no Indian will set foot upon the ground.

The route leads into the desert at a point within 19 miles of Apache Junction and extends across the rolling desert for about six miles and then enters the mountains, where it winds and twists through weird rock formations until the summit is reached. Here, Canon Lake, made by the Mormon Flat Dam, is viewed with its varied assortment of boats ranging from small rowboats to pretentious house-boats. The road lies along the rim of this body of water for several miles, then climbs the famous Fish Creek Hill to the summit, with a spectacular drop of 1,500 feet in a mile and a half. From the foot of this hill the road again leads upward until the first glimpse is had of the lake made by the Horse Mesa Dam and this lake is in sight continuously until the Roosevelt Dam is reached.

The Apache Trail proper does not cross the Roosevelt Dam but a short side trip leads across the dam to the Lodge Hotel. Returning to the main road, the motorist follows beautiful Roosevelt Lake for miles, thence past the ancient cliff dwellings, which may be seen from the road, and through very interesting scenery to Globe.

Short side trips can be made to the Mormon Flat and Horse Mesa dams.

RICH MIXTURES

THE ever-receding saturation point in the automobile industry has been put off a few more years by dealers setting a quota of two or three cars for every family. Here's hoping this won't establish a precedent for the saxophone manufacturers.

YOUR CAR

How To Drive & Care For It

By — Don C. Streeter

Service Manager of the Ross Motor Car Company

IT sounded like a concrete mixer getting into action, but the thing that really woke me was my next-door neighbor's racing engine. For "Ruts," as his cronies call him, is convinced that high speed idling is the one and only way to warm the engine up without its stopping.

Once his engine was as quiet as the best, but now it rattles and clanks and grinds—and racing has done it. For racing racks a stiff engine, overloads the bearings before the stiff oil can thin out, and subjects piston heads to a blast of livid fire before the rest of the engine has lost its chill.

Pour boiling water on the bottom of a stone cold milk bottle. It will give you a striking illustration of the expansion strains imposed on pistons when the engine is driven furiously while cold. Then consider that these intense extremes of heat and cold are combined with inertia strains of rapidly moving parts before the lubrication system has started to function, and you get some idea of the damage that can be done in a short time.

Heat is needed to make the engine work right, but it is the heat of slow idling that does the trick without destructive consequences. For heat spreads but slowly from the combustion chamber through the cylinder casting to the carburetor, manifolds and crankcase, and frenzied racing of the engine will speed up the warming process little if any.

Some car owners race the engine to keep it from stopping, but this means that they never learned to work the choker right. Most cars need to have the choke pulled all the way out to start, but they also require that the choke be pushed in part way the instant the engine starts. If the choke is held all the way out the engine floods with gas and stops. If the choke is pushed all the way in, the gas mixture gets too much air and the engine stops. The right place is part way in and should be learned. It is a trick to find the place, but it is a trick that saves the engine's life and saves many starts to get one good one.

A little attention to the sounds the engine makes will soon show whether the choke has been pushed in too much, or has been held all the way out. If the engine lurches and jerks, the choke is probably pushed in from its extreme out position, but not quite far enough in.

Learn to work the choke, run the engine at slow or moderate speed while warming it up and you will be repaid with easy starting and the increased life of your car.

The TRAFFIC COP

HERE is another thought for the pedestrian. When you are about to cross the street give a thought to your own safety. The motorist is on the lookout for those who carelessly step onto thoroughfares, but often through no fault of his the walker is hurt. The Traffic Cop, in co-operation with the Traffic Police, each week will provide a safety thought in this section.

Every day traffic is thicker and thicker, pedestrians now must be quicker and quicker; look around before the crossing you begin, be wise and be careful and you surely will win.

"How did you become such a victim of wanderlust?"

"From searching around for a place to park."

MY wife and I, we pondered long,
And read each advertisement;
We studied every catalogue and took our friends' advisement.
We'd saved to buy a motor car by various devices,
And when we'd picked the car we liked we started checking prices.

We settled on a Soaring Six; it's price, $692,
Besides some added little words—
"at factory, f. o. b."
And so we sought our savings book and looked at our account,
And found with glee its total sum was just the right amount.

We strolled into the salesroom then, and said: "Here is the cash.
Fill up the tank with gasoline and let us cut a dash."
The salesman counted up our roll, and said: "It seems to me
You've made a trifling error here,
That price was f. o. b."

"We'll have to add the federal tax,
we'll have to add the freight;
The bumpers, they are extra, too,
and there's the license plate.
The spare [illegible] isn't figured in;
you'll need a spotlight, too.
Delivered price, equipped to run, is just $852!"

"And what did you do?" asked the anxious mother.

"I told him I wasn't running a prep school."

"Do you believe there is safety in numbers?"

"Sure! When I'm touring I always tie an extra one on the back of my car, so the speed cops can't look up my car."

English to Fight Lump Tax

LEVY ON FUEL TO BE ASKED IN PETITION

Believe That Owning of Two Cars May Be Made More Attractive—Many Idle.

LONDON, England, March 24.—In order to impress upon parliament the urgent need for the drastic amendment of the present system of motor taxation, the Automobile Association has organized a petition to parliament to be signed by all owners and users of motor vehicles.

Through the medium of its 350,000 members, and other channels the association hopes to induce parliament, at an early date, to repeal the present system and substitute a method by which every individual motor owner will be taxed in proportion to his road use.

In the experience of the association, the present lump sum tax has been arbitrary in its operation, unjust in its incidence, and irritating to the taxpayer, and parliament is urged to adopt a flat petrol (gasoline) tax as the basis by which the revenue required from motorists should be raised.

Among the objections which would be overcome by the petrol tax are:

It is collected by a method which entirely ignores the extent of road usage, despite the fact that the tax was originally imposed solely for road costs.

A great number of owner drivers who are only able to use their cars occasionally or at week-ends are unduly penalized by having to pay the same tax as those who are using their cars continually.

The payment of a lump sum tax in advance presses hardly upon motorists of moderate means.

The keeping of reserve vehicles is discouraged, as the person owning two cars, only one of which is on the road at a time, is compelled to pay full tax on both cars.

Large numbers of second-hand cars which—with the petrol tax—would be occasionally used, are lying idle throughout the country, because of the liability to heavy taxation immediately they are taken into use.

The Automobile Association contends that the case for the petrol tax has been proved up to the hilt, that there is little or no difficulty in defining motor spirit for the purposes of taxation, that the possibilities of the tax being evaded are remote, that theoretical objections of this kind have been exaggerated out of all proportion to their real importance, and that—given the goodwill of the authorities—a flat rate duty is a practicable and sound basis for the equitable taxation of motor owners.

Harmony in Auto Line

AND FASHION—Unusual lines of beauty and marked refinements are characteristic of the perfected Whippet sedan, the attractive offering of the Rea-Seagert Company. The exterior lines are long and graceful with a smart color combination that harmonizes perfectly with the rich interior appointments and fittings. The cadet type sun visor and the employment of full crowned fenders add to the attractiveness of the car.

New Transmission Speeds Graham-Paige

General interest in the first passenger cars to bear the name of the three Graham brothers has been so keen that but little emphasis has been placed on one of the most significant features of the Graham-Paige announcement—that is, that the modern type four-speed transmission, providing superior pick-up and climbing ability, smoother running at high speeds, ease of operation and improved fuel economy, has been adopted for use on three series of six-cylinder cars as well as the eight, states E. S. Carpenter, of the Pittsburgh Paige Company.

For years it has been the ideal of engineers to build automobiles capable of high road speed at low engine speed without sacrificing rapid pick-up and hill-climbing ability. However, these two performance characteristics are directly opposed, for a high gear ratio necessary to hold down the engine speed decreases accelerating and climbing ability, while a low gear ratio, for good pick-up and hill-climbing, requires excessive engine speed for fast travel, with its evils of noise and vibration.

The Graham-Paige solution of the problem is a high-geared rear axle, insuring low engine speed at high road speeds, with a quiet and efficient internal-gear third speed that provides brilliant acceleration and hill-climbing ability.

The action of a car with the improved four-speed transmission is quite new. In third, it has the increased pulling power ordinarily obtained by the use of second; yet this third gear is capable of driving the car at 50 or 55 miles an hour, and does so without the usual gear noises.

In direct drive, with a rear axle ratio of 3.64 to 1, engine speed is 25 per cent lower than in cars of average gear ratio, continued Mr. Carpenter. At 60 miles an hour, the engine of the Graham-Paige revolves no faster than in a three-speed car at 45 miles an hour. At this comparatively low engine speed, engine noise is minimized, and there is not the roaring or the vibration of engine and drive shaft that results from very high engine speeds.

The improved four-speed transmission is not an experiment. It was used during the last year in a previous eight-cylinder Paige model, where its advantages were found to be so great that it was adopted for four series of the new Graham-Paige cars. It now becomes available to the many motorists whose purchases are made in the medium-price field.

Worn Insulation Power Loss Cause

Watch the insulation of the ignition cable. Worn out or defective insulation is one of the chief causes of loss of power, increase of gas consumption, and larger operating costs.

WILLYS OPENS NEW MARKET

Willys-Overland's recent introduction of a new Willys-Knight six, to sell at the lowest price ever reached by a car employing a Willys-Knight sleeve-valve engine, is considered equally as spectacular as the company's drastic Whippet price reduction that has placed this car in direct price competition with the lowest priced cars in the light four-cylinder field.

The Willys-Knight Standard Six is approximately 25 per cent lower in price than any car of this type ever built by the company, says Jay Rea of Rea-Seagert, distributors here. Its introduction opens an entirely new market since thousands of buyers were formerly prevented from owning a Willys-Knight six because of price consideration.

It is known that because of the highest type of engineering and workmanship demanded in the production of a Knight sleeve-valve engine, the manufacturing costs have been materially higher than the cost of building power plants of another design. In fact it was believed for years that because of the high cost of producing the sleeve-valve engine it would never be possible to install this type of power plant in a car selling below $1,500.

7-Passenger Sedan

The Airman presents

a NEW IDEA in 7-passenger cars

Meeting the demand for roominess without bulk

Here is an amazing, new car that will revolutionize 7-passenger motor car design. Franklin has achieved what fine car purchasers have long demanded and what all manufacturers have hoped to accomplish—a light-weight, 7-passenger sedan, with ample room and complete comfort.

This tremendous advance was made possible by air-cooling—the better way to cool airplane and automobile engines—the foundation of Franklin weight-saving and flexibility.

So you enjoy big car advantages with none of the drawbacks—the car maneuvers with runabout ease, quick to respond to throttle or brake, turning with a 16-foot radius, parking without tiresome tugging, steering true to the course by a touch of the wheel.

The use of full-elliptic springs—the most resilient and comfortable type of springs—gives the Airman comfort-advantages over every other fine car. Airman comfort means less fatigue in a day's trip than a few hours' run in most other cars.

The 7-passenger sedan, besides being the ideal family car, offers the same performance features as all other Airman models. A more powerful motor—performing smoothly, faithfully and efficiently. All-day speed—with rocket acceleration. Perfectly synchronized, 4-wheel brakes—always positive action.

A ride in an Airman is an entirely new motoring experience—a startling revelation in performance and control. May we arrange a demonstration in the new 7-passenger sedan—or any other Airman model? Franklin term payments are convenient.

FEW CHANGES PREDICTED IN PLANE DESIGN

Increased Size, Greater Comfort, Safety and Speed Expected During Year.

By CHARLES M'LEAN,
Universal Service Staff Correspondent.

HASBROUCK HEIGHTS, N. J., Mar. 24.—Larger planes, probably up to 20-passenger capacity, and with more speed than planes now in service have,

There will be no radical change in designs, simply a gradual development of the ships that are now so greatly in demand. Large planes, like the present models every factory is striving to deliver to anxious buyers, will rule during the year.

Briefly, that is the opinion of Robert B. C. Noorluyn, general manager of the Atlantic Aircraft plant. More familiarly he is known as "Bob" Noorluyn, boss of the Fokker plants. He added:

"Comfort is going to be first. That means more luxurious fittings, accommodations equal to those on the Pullman cars. That is being rapidly accomplished.

"Added speed, of which I spoke, means just that. But it also means there will be a tremendous reserve power always available in case of need. That will inspire confidence.

"You have speed, safety, comfort. What else has a transportation agency to offer?

"Probably the most luxuriously equipped airline in the world, the Western Airways, operating under loans from the Guggenheim fund, have placed orders for four tri-motored planes. There they are. One is already completed. The others will soon be ready.

"Every aircraft plant in the country is behind with orders. Their planes have been proven to the Department of Commerce. There will always remain the chance of accidents. They happen to any organization.

"But those are the three factors I foresee. Speed, comfort and confidence."

safety. The latter has aroused

NEW MOTOR WINS TEST

Results of a 400-hour test of the Charter sleeve-valve type of radial motor, in which is used a revolving sleeve valve, were announced by J. A. Charter, inventor of the motor.

The test, to determine the possible life of this valve under a full engine load, revealed the fact that the engine gained in actual horsepower slightly more than 1 per cent, showing that under this long, continuous endurance run that the valve had not been affected and that the engine actually pulled better after the test than before.

The engine was carefully calibrated before the test and again carefully checked after the 400-hour run. The test was made on a standard electrical dynamometer, such as is used regularly for such purposes and was under continual observation. No other engine of any make has ever been held under continuous loads more than 300 hours, according to Mr. Charter.

Experts who watched the test declare that the revolving sleeve valve engine, which greatly simplifies construction and eliminates hundreds of parts, is especially adaptable to flying and will more than double the actual flying hours of any machine in which this motor is used.

"This engine will completely fulfill Henry Ford's recent prediction that 'the development in aviation that is most needed is a better engine'," Mr. Charter asserted. "The cost of this engine will be less than any now on the market, and it will weigh much less, because of the fewer parts."

Organization of company to place the motor on the market is already under way and many manufacturers have already made inquiries as to its availability, according to Mr. Charter.

Many Cities Join In Aviation Week

DETROIT, March 24.—Aviation week, which will be celebrated in Detroit during the progress of the All-American Aircraft Show, April 14-21, not only has taken on a national aspect, but has aroused the enthusiasm of aviation followers across the national boundary.

Canadian cities across the river from Detroit will send over a large delegation, headed by a band of Scottish pipers. Boards of commerce and other civic organizations in the border cities are arranging an aviation mass meeting, to which show visitors will be invited.

Detroit service and business men's clubs, school children and women's organizations are co-operating. The women's organizations have laid plans for a luncheon for 1,000. They will visit the Ford airport and attend the show in a body. The Exchange clubs of the Detroit region alone are planning to bring together 1,200 of their members for an aviation party, preceding their journey to the show.

Frank Cody, superintendent of schools of Detroit, and the Board of Education have organized the school children's participation.

Special study hours on areonautical subjects, touching particularly upon the value of the aircraft industry as a community benefit, are scheduled for show week. Boy Scouts, likewise, are active in support of the exposition.

A committee is working out plans for the aviation dinner on Monday night. H. H. Rice, assistant to the president of the General Motors Corporation, is chairman of the banquet committee. Mr. Rice promises that speakers of national prominence will be heard. A dinner for exhibitors is to be given later in the week by the show management.

The Society of Automotive Engineers will hold its annual aeronautics session here during the week, and the Junior Chambers of Commerce of Michigan, representing the younger business element of 20 cities, will hold a session devoted to aviation.

ROTOR PLANE PATENT ASKED

BERLIN, Mar. 24.—A "rotor airplane," driven by a motor operated upon the principle of Flettner's "rotor ship" is one of the latest of the 260 applications for patents which are filed every day in the German patent office.

The "rotor motor" is a symbol of the German inventive brain which is working now at a speed never before attained. Restricted by the treaty of Versailles from exercising its talents militarily and forced by the reparations payments to develop its economic system to the highest efficiency.

TAIL SPINS by WALTER CHAMBERS • Aviation Editor •

Lindbergh, Chamberlin, Goebel, Wade and other luminaries in aviation have remarked within the year the acme of progression in aeronautical motors in the United States. Each calls attention to the much faster development in motors—and planes—than in air travel and airports.

Due to their exploits, air traffic at least is growing, while every hamlet, it seems, has started building an adequate airport. Manufacturers are months behind in orders for planes. Department of Commerce statistics show that in January and February of this year more planes were delivered than were constructed throughout 1926. The same statistics report 2,000 airports in use, under construction or planned. If the movement proceeds at this rate two or three years will see realized the dream of the cross-country pilot—a landing field always within gliding distance.

When 5,000 or 6,000 airports are established and the routes between lighted, the air will be alive with planes. The only serious danger to flying now is the absence of emergency fields, and while the experienced airman starts on a cross-country hop undeterred by the danger of a forced landing, it is basically a handicap to those trying to develop air travel.

In all the United States there is no more hazardous country over which the pilot flies than our own mountains in Western Pennsylvania. The district has long been known as "the graveyard of airmen." Between coasts it is the worst country on the route until the flier is within less than an hour from the Pacific. Adequate airports, then, are more essential here than elsewhere if this natural handicap is to be overcome.

With almost an ideal field promised for Pittsburgh, to be ready within a year, we should begin the battle for dominance in the industry. Every city in the country is out to get aviation. Detroit wants to repeat what its natural advantages brought to it in the automotive industry.

In aviation, Pittsburgh has those advantages. Here we have the aluminum industry, certain to provide the materials for most of the larger planes of the future. We have the steel industry, with its frame tubing and supports, a generous portion of the electrical and radio industry, and a factory which, during the war, built thousands of airplane motors.

From the standpoint of air transport, Pittsburgh's strategic position cannot be too often emphasized. It is better than Cleveland, Detroit, Buffalo or Chicago. Pittsburgh, long known to frontiersmen as "The Gateway to the West," occupies a relatively more important position in aviation. It is the gateway to the northwest, the west, the southwest and the great Mississippi Valley.

Within five hours from Pittsburgh by air, live 85,000,000 of this country's 120,000,000 people. It is the natural concentration point for all goods and persons traveling from New England and the East to any of the sections just mentioned. Likewise, it is a straight airline route from Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia, with their respective tributary sections, into the sections beyond us.

But more important than that even is Pittsburgh's location in regard to traffic between New York and California. Because airplane travel becomes monotonous after the first two hours, Pittsburgh is logically the first stop where westbound passengers from the Atlantic coast may "stretch themselves." In eastbound traffic it likewise is the last stop for fuel and rest.

Between New York and Los Angeles, via Pittsburgh, lies the safest, most beautiful and the shortest route, by 700 miles. From Pittsburgh the route goes straight west to Columbus and Dayton, then to St. Louis, Wichita, Albuquerque and the Pacific coast.

It will be a mighty shame if Pittsburgh fails to take advantage of its natural situation in aviation. It must not be so. The aviation industry, with its many thousands of employes, its payroll of millions, its civic advertising, must be utilized as surely as will be our new airport. Stout is ready to extend his line here when adequate landing facilities are available. A local company has applied for a charter and is ready to invest $500,000 in equipment. Other companies have cast longing eyes for the traffic which is certain to develop here when the taint of "the graveyard" has been forever removed.

Let us then be up and doing.

Clarence Chamberlin, modest, unassuming, efficient, spent several days in McKeesport last week installing a Pittsburgh-made propeller on his Sperry Messenger plane. He appears sometimes almost as "The Human Tragedy" of aviation. Competent, ready, he had to wait, because of regrettable circumstances over which he had no control, and see young Lindbergh come out of the West and capture the prize and the immortal glory of the New York to Paris flight.

Now, on the same day that newspapers announce Lindbergh has become a millionaire in 10 short months, Chamberlin, who demonstrated that the achievement was within his power, lectures in small towns for little more than he could earn as a mail pilot. When he came among us it was McKeesport, and not Pittsburgh, which guaranteed him $1,000 for a two-day appearance there. Cliff Ball, Pittsburgh-Cleveland air mail contractor, remarked, as Chamberlin took the air for Washington, "Pittsburgh got Lindbergh for nothing and spent $18,000 entertaining him. It was McKeesport which raised the $1,000 to hear Chamberlin's own story of his flight across the Atlantic." Such is life, eh, what?

But, for the matter of that, there are many pilots in the United States, several in Pittsburgh, capable of flying from New York to Paris. Lindbergh did it first, and nobody envies the victor the spoils. But we do sympathize with Chamberlin.

James C. Beaudreau, director of art in Pittsburgh's public schools, told the Aero Club Thursday of his two momentous flights. The first was his solo hop when he bounced 60 feet on his first landing. The second was his flight over the front-line trenches. "On orders" he flew at 1,200 feet and, most remarkable, not a shot was fired at him between Paris and Brussels. "This flight," he added, "took place two years after the war."

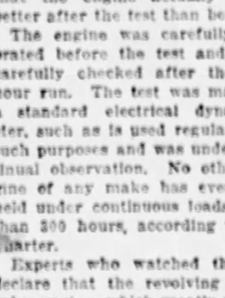
Mr. Beaudreau is one of the most active of Jack Feery's committee on the National Miniature Airplane Tournament in which it is expected 500 Pittsburgh boys will compete this year. The tournament will be held June 16 (Saturday afternoon), at the Aero Club, Rodgers Field.

Picked Our Airport



J. E. Sommers

John E. ("Jack") Sommers, airways superintendent of the Department of Commerce, spent two days in Pittsburgh recently, inspecting more than a dozen of the 150 sites suggested for Pittsburgh's new municipal airport. His report is already back, but his choice will not be made known until the Chamber of Commerce committee makes it's formal report—probably next week.

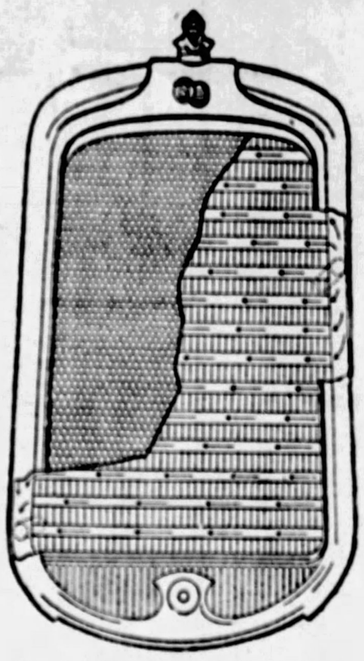
A Master Stroke of Engineering -the Cross-flow Radiator introduced on the New Series Pontiac Six



The "cross-flow" radiator consists of two side tanks, a top tank and a core made up of horizontal passages. Water from the engine enters the inlet tank at one side, flows horizontally through the core and is pumped from the outlet tank back into the water jacketing. It cannot come in contact with the water in the top tank until after it has been cooled, and, as a result, even though the cooling liquid is boiling when it enters the radiator, it is practically impossible to lose any appreciable amount of water or alcohol due to high operating temperature.

Not only does the New Series Pontiac Six offer new bodies whose vividness of style challenges the world's finest cars. Not only does it offer scores of advanced engineering features never before combined in a car of such low price. But in addition, it introduces an advancement available on no other low-priced car in the world—that master stroke of engineering genius—the "cross-flow" radiator.

With the "cross-flow" radiator, losses of water in summer and alcohol in winter are reduced to a minimum with a resultant decrease in radiator attention—correct temperature of cooling water is assured—and a sturdier front-end construction is obtained.

Engineers and owners unite in acclaiming the "cross-flow" radiator one of the greatest automotive developments of recent years. Yet this is only one of scores of engineering advancements included in the New Series Pontiac Six—only one of a dozen reasons why you should inspect and drive this marvelous new General Motors car!

Spring Car Overhauling Means Carefree Summer

DIRT COVERS MANY WEAK, WORN PARTS

Clean, Grease, Tighten and Replace Are Rules to Follow After Winter Driving

Ice, snow, rain and slush—all through the changeable winter weather the car has been in daily service. Short runs and operation in freezing weather have placed a severe burden on the mechanical parts and a careful "once-over" at your service station will go a long way toward guaranteeing a summer of carefree operation, according to David Gregg, research engineer, who tells what should be done to put a car in the pink of condition.

"Let us assume," he says, "that the car has come through a hard winter's service in fairly good mechanical shape—plenty of carbon and leaky valves, perhaps, but no burnt out bearings or badly worn parts. What's to be done to tune it up? First of all let's start with a bath—clean the engine, chassis and body thoroughly—dirt covers many defects, and makes it harder to work around the car. Check the chassis first. See that the spring clips are all tight; take any excess play out of the spring shackles. Clean and grease the steering gear, and check the alignment of the front wheels—first adjusting the wheel bearings and filling the hub caps with fresh grease. See that the nuts holding the rear wheels to the axles are drawn tight and fastened with a cotter pin.

DRAIN THE OIL

"Now for the rest of the car. Drain the oil from the transmission and rear end, and put about a quart of kerosene or flushing oil in each. Put a couple of handfuls of sal soda in the radiator and run the car for a few miles till it is well warmed up. The soda cleans out the scale and rust in the radiator while the kerosene will loosen and wash out all the old oil in the transmission and differential. Drain these as soon as you stop, then drain the water from the radiator and flush with fresh water. Remove the cylinder head and scrape out all the carbon and grind the valves. Now a new gasket when you put back the head—it makes a better job and no chance of leaks.

"New rubber hose on all the water connections is well worth while, too. Fill the radiator with fresh water and start the engine. Run slowly till warmed up. Valve tappets should be adjusted, motor being warm while this is being done. Follow the manufacturing recommendations for clearances. Remember that while reduced clearances may mean quieter operation, they also are a cause of burnt and warped valves. When the engine is warmed up, test your oil filter. If oil flows through it freely, OK—otherwise, replace the cartridge at once. In a season's operation this oil filter collects more than two pounds of foreign matter that would otherwise circulate through the engine causing rapid wear and premature age.

CHECK CHARGING RATE

"Oil the starting motor and generator, and check for proper summer charging rate, as covered by latest instructions by manufacturers of the ignition system; this may prevent a damaged battery due to overcharging on long, fast summer trips.

"Clean the breaker points in the distributor and set them to their proper opening. Clean the spark plugs. If plugs are badly scored or points worn to any degree, install a new set. Cleaning plugs will have a beneficial effect on the motor, however, new plugs will pep the motor up and give better operation. Clean off all the ignition wires and see that the contacts are tight. Clean the storage battery with ammonia water, tighten the terminals and coat them with vaseline or grease. Be sure that the battery is securely held in place. Check the liquid level and add distilled water if necessary.

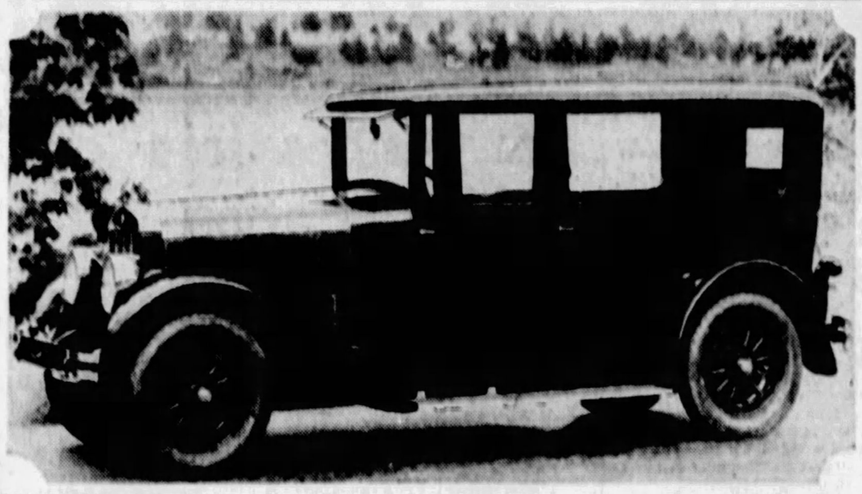
"Examine the fan belt; if it is worn, install a new one.

CLEAN THE TANK

"In the bottom of the gas tank is a small drain plug. Remove it and drain out about a quart of liquid. This will clean out any water or dirt that has settled at the bottom of the tank. Clean the fuel strainer and the carburetor strainer, and tighten all connections. As less fuel is required for summer driving, better check the carburetor for the most economical operation.

"Now we come to the finishing touches. Drain the old oil from the crankcase, flush, and fill with fresh oil. Replace the drain plugs on the differential and transmission and put in the proper amount of the recommended grade of gear compound. Refill the radiator with fresh water. Keep your car supplied with water and fresh oil, give it a thorough greasing once every 500 miles and you will have a head of you a summer of carefree driving, free from all mechanical troubles and annoyances."

Introducing New Trends



HABIT HERE— The introduction of new trends has become part of the fame of the Franklin. In this Airman seven-passenger sedan a saving in weight of several hundred pounds has been effected, and the motor has been developed to produce 24.3 per cent more power than formerly.

Poor of Mexico Making Shoes From Old Tires

GREEK peasants and the poorer workers in Mexico now use old automobile tires for shoes. The Greeks have substituted rubber for the laced strip of leather which formerly composed the tcharik of the villagers.

The Mexicans cut a piece of rubber to the shape of the sole and attach it with leather thongs.

NEW WHIPPET ROUNDS LINE

Willys-Overland's presentation of the 1928 Whippet Collegiate roadster rounds out the company's complete line of Whippet models. The new roadster on the Whippet chassis carries out the same smartness that characterized its predecessor and made it one of the most popular in the roadster class. This popularity attained by the stylish Whippet Collegiate roadster was especially noticeable with the younger set because of its smart appearance, speed, power and economy.

The 1928 Collegiate Roadster is striking in appearance with the adoption of full crowned fenders, which add a rakish effect to the long sweeping lines.

This car is the same type that has established unusual speed and stamina performances during the last year in stock car races in various parts of the country, attaining speeds in many instances of 70 miles an hour. It is the same type car that negotiated the almost impossible climb up the Seventeenth Street Inclined Plane here a few months ago. It was the first time in history that any car ever climbed the steep 41 per cent grade—considered one of the most notable power accomplishments in the history of the light car field. The 350-foot climb was accomplished in 46 seconds.

EUROPE TURNS TO AIR-COOLING

"The present trend in automobile body styles in Europe is distinctly away from what the European manufacturers term the 'Detroit School,'" H. H. Franklin, president of Franklin Automobile Company of Syracuse, N. Y., said last week.

"Employment of elaborate fitments inside and outside the car has disappeared on all better cars in Europe," Mr. Franklin stated. "The trend is toward more elegant bodies built to emphasize simplicity, obtaining beauty by means of line and proportion rather than embellishment."

Mr. Franklin reported that there was a greatly increased interest in air-cooling abroad both in aviation and automotive engines. Airplane engineers have accepted the air-cooled engine as the proper motive power for aircraft and a great deal of experimentation and thought is being given air-cooled automobile engines. A recent aviation air-cooled engine with cylinders in line, almost identical with the Franklin engine has proved successful in France. One of the interesting new European cars is a German product, equipped with a four-cylinder air-cooled engine.

ENGLERT TIRES MADE IN AKRON

In last Sunday's issue of The Sun-Telegraph an article appeared which in a way was misleading. The story was illustrated and showed one of the processes designed to build more life into the tire of today. Through an error one sentence in this article read: "Here we see the giant calendars employed in the factory of the Englert Tire and Rubber Company at Akron." This sentence should have read: "Here we see the giant calendars employed in the Akron factory which manufactures tires for the Englert Tire and Rubber Company."

Brakes Ought to Be Adjusted, Equalized

Brakes that aren't adjusted and equalized rattle, chatter and squeak. The tread of one or more of your tires is soon worn down: the frame of the car is distorted with strain; the wheels lose their perfect alignment. Brakes should be adjusted every 30 days.

Photograph Sound In Auto Horn Tests

To determine just what kind of automobile horn is to be tolerated hereafter, tests are being made in a government school in Paris, France, and sounds are to be classified into agreeable, tolerable and intolerable. Sound waves are transformed into light vibrations and these are photographed, so there is a definite record of the noises and the limits can be determined with mathematical accuracy.

Three-Fourths Roads Of Danes Macadam

More than three-fourths of all roads in Denmark are paved with macadam.

PLAN PROTECTS SECOND OWNER

That manufacturers of motor cars are interesting themselves more and more in the service their products deliver, not only to the first owner, but to subsequent users as well, is shown by steps which several prominent companies have taken to insure second owners of satisfaction.

One of the plans which has roused much interest among manufacturers in the gold seal plan of the Buick Motor Company, establishing standards of used car dealing which are said to be unique. The gold seal plan was tried out thoroughly in several localities before adaptation to national use, and is said to have worked out satisfactorily wherever applied.

The Buick gold seal plan is based on Buick's conviction that its product possesses a definite value, in the form of reliable transportation, after the average first owner has relinquished it. Cars are being built better today than ever before, it was felt, and the public knows more than ever before about operating and caring for them. Buick plan is to surround its dealers' used Buick transactions with precautions to insure the customer of satisfaction equal to that derived from a new Buick.

U. S. Pays $9,000,000 When Rubber Jumps

American car owners pay $9,000,000 for every 1 cent increase in the price of rubber, according to the American Automobile Association.

Oil Filter Saves Costly Repair Bills

DETROIT, March 24.—How the motorist can save on oil expense and repair bills through proper attention to the oil filter on his car was stressed in a statement released here today by O. E. Hunt, chief engineer of the Chevrolet Motor Company.

His announcement followed experiments conducted by research engineers of the AC Spark Plug Company, makers of Chevrolet oil filters, showing that a full pint of abrasive matter accumulated in the filter after every 10,000 miles of driving.

This residue possessed such high abrasive qualities that it could have been used effectively for sharpening knives or grinding valves.

"If this abrasive matter had not been trapped in the oil filter," Mr. Hunt said, "it would have done severe damage to cylinders, pistons and other internal working parts of the engine. Excessive repair bills might have been the result.

"After the filter has seen 10,000 miles of service, however, the filtering unit becomes clogged with grit and other foreign matter taken from the oil, and ceases to function properly. The filteration unit then should be replaced."

NEW ZEALAND TAXES GASOLINE

To finance an extensive program of highway development, New Zealand will impose a tax of approximately eight cents a gallon on gasoline, according to information received by the National Automobile Club. Gasoline was recently removed from the New Zealand free list of imports regardless of the country of origin.

Gears Frequently Cause of Noises

Timing gears are a frequent cause of aggravated noises in motors.

Bigger and Better

Fisher Bodies — Chevrolet is the lowest priced car in the world offering bodies by Fisher—famous the world over for style leadership, comfort, modern design and the safety of combined hardwood and steel construction.

Genuine Duco Finishes — All Chevrolet models are finished in smooth shades of genuine Duco—the original, lustrous motor car finish which does not check or crack and which maintains its lustrous new car beauty indefinitely.

Adjustable Valve Tappets — The improved valve-in-head motor of the new Chevrolet has adjustable valve tappets—a feature which assures continued motor efficiency and quiet—and prevents gradual loss of power and acceleration as the car is used.

Crankcase Breathing System — A ventilating system which clears the crankcase of vapors prior to condensation, minimizes oil dilution, and adds materially to the long life of the motor.

"Inver Strut" Pistons — Constant clearance alloy pistons, designed with new "inver strut" in each, make the Chevrolet motor smoother, snappier and more powerful. The costly "inver struts" minimize expansion and contraction, permitting close fitting pistons to insure quietness and efficient operation.

AC Oil Filter — The crankcase oil that is circulated by the self-priming pump is constantly forced through an AC oil filter which strains out dirt and foreign material, thereby increasing the life of all moving parts inside the motor.

Rugged One-Piece Rear Axle — The rear axle of the Chevrolet is a unit proved by millions of miles of use. The differential mechanisms and side gears are accurately mounted, while the housing is the one-piece type fitted with an inspection plate for convenient, inexpensive adjustment.

AC Air Cleaner — An AC Air Cleaner is another motor safeguard which removes dust and grit from the air drawn into the carburetor—a modern feature which adds to car life and operating efficiency by reducing internal wear.

Ball Bearing Steering Gear — The new Chevrolet handles with marvelous ease and sureness—for the worm and gear steering mechanism is fitted with ball bearings throughout, even at the front axle knuckles.

Non-Locking Four-Wheel Brakes with separate Emergency Brake — Chevrolet's four-wheel brakes were developed in cooperation with General Motors engineers. They are non-locking, have an area of 189 sq. in. and are separate from the emergency brake.

Safety Gasoline Tank — All Chevrolet models have a safety gasoline tank in the rear and a vacuum fuel system which assures positive gasoline supply even on the steepest hills. The tank is protected by a heavy steel cross member and is provided with a gasoline gauge.

Semi-Elliptic Shock Absorber Springs — Comfort and safety over all roads is assured by Chevrolet's semi-elliptic shock absorber springs set parallel to the frame. These are 84% as long as the wheelbase and are made of fine chrome vanadium steel.

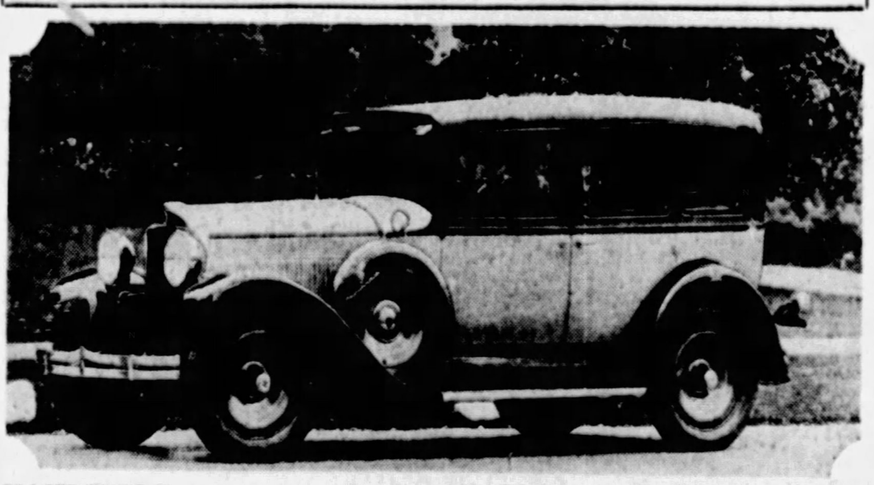
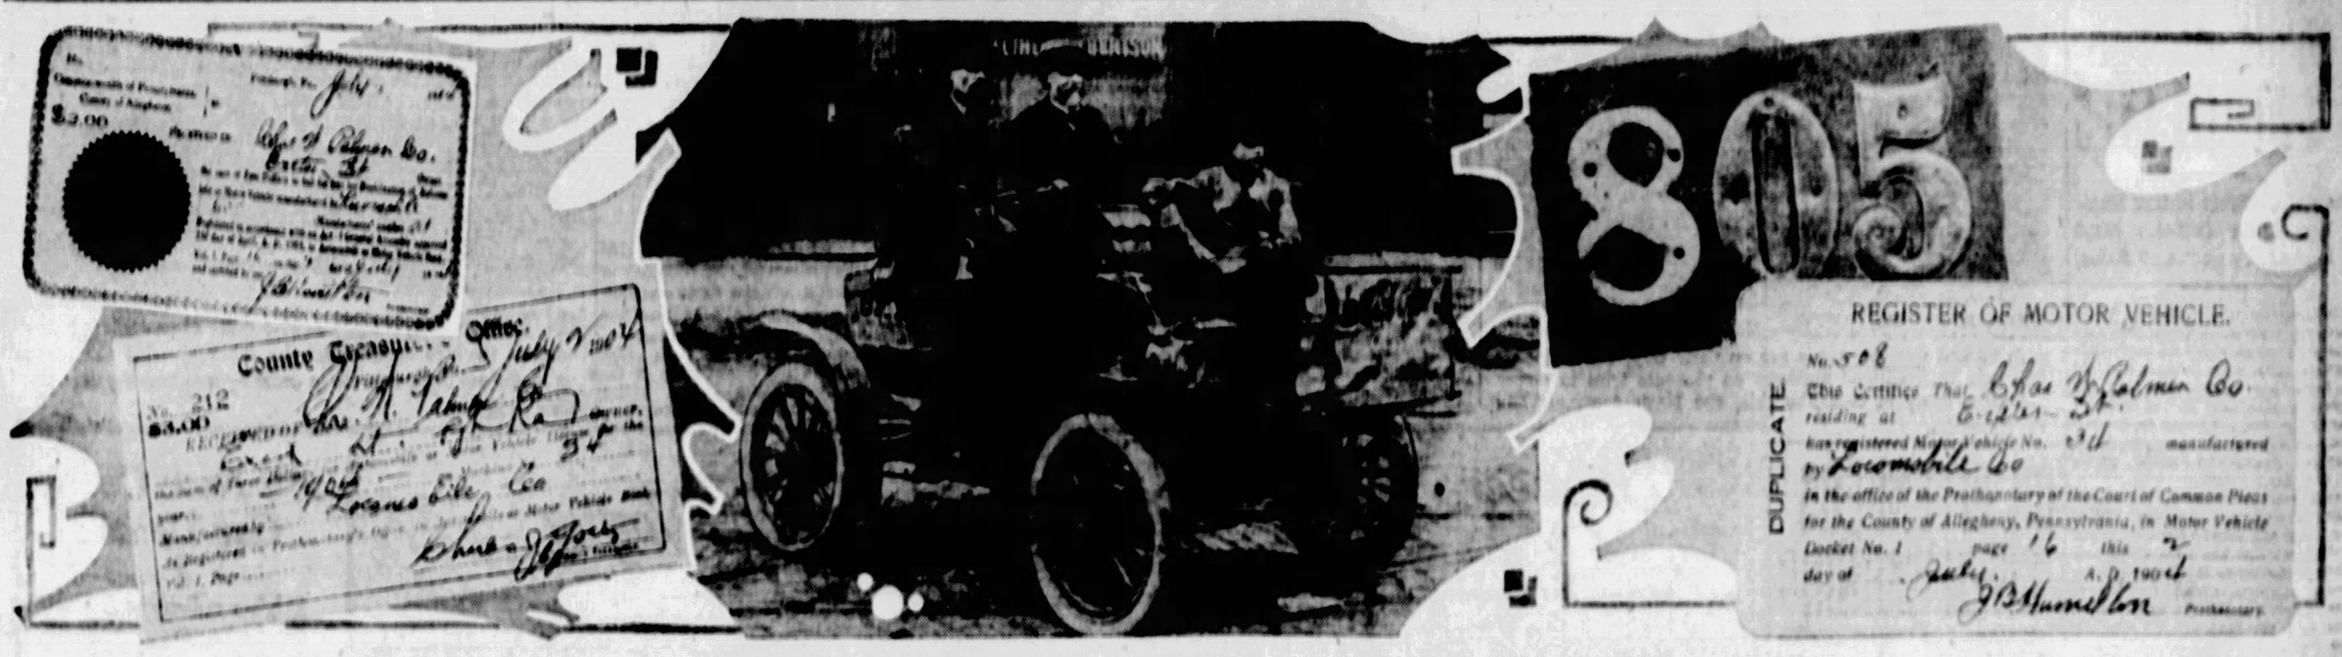
A Few Lines to Talk About



IN TRENDS— This is the new 1928 Hupmobile six sedan, a car in which up-to-the-minute trends in design have been accorded free play, states H. F. Gleason, of Whitehill-Gleason Motors, Inc. Its long, low, shapely lines, set off by a smart visor and high, distinctive radiator, draw instant attention to the beauty and new vogue of the roomy body.

Factory Capacities Taxed by Demand for New Cars

In the Early Days of Motoring, When Owners Made Own Plate and License Cost Three Dollars



PLENTY EVIDENCE—These two slips of paper show that Charles W. Palmer registered his car and paid his tax, in 1904, when they first began to "charge" the owners of horseless carriages for the use of the streets. In those days the cars were registered by the county and the tax paid to the county.

RUN BY STEAM—Charles W. Palmer, 4319 Murray avenue, at the wheel of his Prescott, a steam car made in 1901 at Passaic, N. J. Lamp oil at eight cents a gallon was the fuel and the car boasted speeds as high as 20 miles an hour. C. S. Thompson, then Mr. Palmer's business partner, and Cassis Fletcher are the passengers. Mr. Palmer traded this car for a Sheraden lot in 1905.

NOBODY CARED—The above was Mr. Palmer's license tag, made by himself, of tin numerals and a heavy piece of ordinary shoe leather. Mr. Palmer was assigned license No. 508, as the card shows, but he made a mistake and made his tag read 805. Evidently the numbers didn't mean much then for he operated his car for more than a year with the wrong number.

Output 15 Per Cent In Excess of 1927

DETROIT, March 24.—With production holding steadily at levels slightly above those of this time last year, there is at present but little doubt that the industry is assured of a period of prosperity which will unquestionably include the first six months of the current year, according to B. H. Crum, industry authority. The leading companies which account for about 95 per cent of the industry's output are now operating at capacity or close to capacity, and the problem from this time on will be to maintain present schedules rather than increase them. Total production for March, 1928, is expected to be at least 15 per cent above the March, 1927, output.

The sales condition appears to be uniformly good throughout the country for the industry as a whole. A period of mild weather brought an increasingly large number of buyers into the market, and present indications point to an extremely favorable volume of spring business. Many of the leading manufacturers, despite heavy production schedules, have a large number of orders on which they are unable to catch up, and with more orders coming in each day, it is apparent that the manufacturing facilities will continue to be taxed to capacity in order to meet the demand. Accordingly, it is safe to assume that dealers are turning their stocks over at a fairly rapid rate, and the dealers' re-orders should show a marked increase during the course of the next 30 days.

While the above conditions apply to the industry in general, certain companies report sales as being spotty. It has been found, however, that such a situation is due to developments in the individual plants. Certain manufacturers are preparing to introduce their new models, and as a result, dealers are trying to clear out the cars now on hand without ordering additional models to replace their depleted stocks. This condition, however, is one that usually is found to apply at any season and in no way reflects the actual sales picture.

"NO LIMIT," TRAFFIC AID

"When a great state like Michigan, decides after due consideration that the only way to deal with the traffic problem and yet maintain safety is to remove the maximum speed limit, there must be something in the idea," said W. H. Patterson, vice president of the Elcar Motor Company, Saturday.

"'No Speed Limit'; suggests a lot of reckless maniacs burning up the highway, but that is not the correct interpretation of the phrase. There is a very definite limit to speed in every case but the limit varies with driving conditions. 'A car shall not be driven at a speed more nor less than is reasonable and proper and a driver must always drive a car in such a manner that he can bring it to a stop in the assured clear distance ahead,' so reads the Michigan law. On clear straightaways a driver can use his own judgment as to speed provided he keeps his car under control. In traffic, the car just ahead limits the 'assured clear distance' and the speed of the car must be regulated to permit stopping within that distance."

Mr. Patterson went on to speak about the significant phrase "more nor less than is reasonable." "The bane of the motorist on great through highways, the slow-poke who delays traffic unreasonably, is hereby required to move at a proper speed or take to the side roads. There are also several safety measures included concerning passing and turning."

SAFE BRAKES CHANDLER TALK

"With the number of motor cars increasing on the highways, the problem presented to automotive engineers has been to increase the safety of these automobiles," states C. H. Kenney, of the Pittsburgh Motor Corporation, Chandler distributor.

"As a consequence, the importance of good brakes continues to be of utmost concern. At first two-wheel brakes seemed sufficient, then came the demand for four-wheel brakes, until practically every car now uses them. Four-wheel brakes have been accepted by the motoring public, but engineers have found that still they can be improved upon.

"So now Chandler is proving the claims of its engineers by using Westinghouse vacuum four-wheel brakes as standard equipment on every model it builds. Public officials, safety councils and many other organizations who are fundamentally interested in safety assert the fact that these brakes are one of the greatest safety factors introduced within recent years on a motor car. So interested have traffic officials become in this brake innovation of Chandler's that they have visited Chandler salesrooms in all sections of the country, reports show, and have given their unqualified indorsement. Chandler officials are indeed proud of the fact that they have introduced a device with their motor cars that will aid nationally the safe and sane driving movement," concludes Mr. Kenney.

Intelligent Buying Marks 1928 Season

Generous, but at the same time intelligent and discriminating buying is plainly observable in the automobile business of 1928, in the opinion of Lynn McNaughton, vice president of the Cadillac Motor Car Company, who has just returned to Detroit from an extensive tour of the South and West, reaching from Florida to California.

"It is plainly observable," Mr. McNaughton states, "that in every part of the country motorists are indicating very definitely just what they want when they come to the point of buying a new car. They are very discriminating, and they choose intelligently.

"The great majority of buyers of today have already owned a number of cars. They know automobiles by reputation, by operating them, and by contacts with the organization which sells and services them. They are experienced judges of the beauty, style, comfort and performance of the car itself, and they have necessarily become well acquainted with the organization behind it.

"Well-established manufacturers today are offering more than at any previous time. A given sum of money buys more automobile and assures better service. In other words, the automobile dollar of 1928 buys more transportation and satisfaction than at any time since the beginning of the industry."

Motor Tax Growth Three Times Auto Registrations

PENNSYLVANIA LEADS STATES IN TOTAL FEES

New York First in Car Number—Ohio Collects Most From Levy on "Gas" Sales.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—State motor vehicle taxes increased three times as much as motor vehicle registrations in 1927, and the average per vehicle tax for the country increased 10 per cent in 1927 over 1926, according to the annual survey of the American Automobile Association made public here today.

The total increase of motor vehicle registration for the United States in 1927 was 5.6 per cent, while the increase in the total amount of special car taxes (exclusive of personal property taxes) for the 48 states and the District of Columbia was 16.1 per cent.

AFFORD TIMELY WARNING

"The facts disclosed by our annual motor vehicle registration and taxation survey reveal to a greater extent than ever before the heavy proportion of taxes that the motorists are bearing and afford a timely warning to the federal government to get out of a taxing field which is already over-exploited," Thomas P. Henry, president of the A. A. A., declared. "The figures should clinch the argument for the immediate repeal of the federal war excise tax."

Following are a few of the facts brought out in the annual tax review:

The average per vehicle tax levy for the entire country was $23.78 in 1927, as compared with $21.60 in 1926, an increase of 10 per cent in a period of 12 months. The per vehicle tax has increased 278 per cent since 1919, when it stood at $8.55.

KEYSTONE STATE THIRD

Seven states had more than a million registrations in 1927. They were: New York, 1,890,479; California, 1,693,186; Pennsylvania, 1,583,763; Ohio, 1,570,418; Illinois, 1,438,985; Michigan, 1,156,344, and Texas, 1,115,890.

In state fees, drivers' licenses and gasoline taxes, the highest five were: Pennsylvania, $43,212,552.92; New York, $31,743,545.47; Michigan, $31,025,267.12; Ohio, $30,548,301.59, and Texas, $30,215,000.68.

In amounts collected from the gas tax, Ohio with $19,894,675, led the list; next came California with $19,-426,175; Pennsylvania, $17,296,332; Texas, $14,560,000, and Michigan, $14,158,271.

$25,000 Wager Race Set for April 16

INDIANAPOLIS, March 24.—Gil Anderson has been chosen as one of the drivers to guide the destinies of a Stutz Black-Hawk which on April 16 will enter into the most unique speed battle in history—a 24-hour duel on the Indianapolis speedway, with a Hispano Suiza of Europe as its opponent and a $25,000 bet at stake. Anderson recently established a new American stock car record of 106.52 miles per hour in a Stutz Black Hawk over a measured mile course at Daytona Beach, Fla.

From Europe it is reported that Robert Benoist, speed champion of the continent will be one of the two pilots of the Hispano-Suiza. The other driver has not been finally announced, but it is rumored he will be Charles T. Weymann, designer of the Weymann automobile body.

The forthcoming race is the outgrowth of an argument between Weymann and F. E. Moskovics, president of the Stutz Motor Car Company of America, Inc., at the Paris Automobile Salon last fall, over the relative merits of American and European stock cars. One point led to another until finally Moskovics and Weymann agreed upon a 24-hour match race at the Indianapolis speedway. At the time the $25,000 bet was made, $5,000 forfeits were deposited in an Indianapolis bank in the name of Edward V. Rickenbacker, head of the speedway.

In addition to the great interest it will draw among lovers of the racing game, the 24-hour race will be considerable of a society event. The sale of all box seats in stand "A," one of the choice vantage points, will be in charge of the Junior League of Indianapolis, and proceeds will be given to worthy charities. Neither of the sponsors of the race nor the Stutz or Hispano-Suiza will share in the profits.

Accident Loss Is A Deductible Tax

The amount of loss sustained in accidental damage to an automobile, even though it be used for pleasure purposes, constitutes a permissible deduction from gross income in the computation of income taxes, the United States Board of Tax Appeals has ruled.

OIL OFFENDERS GIVEN WARNING

The action of District Attorney Samuel H. Gardner in warning gasoline and oil dealers in Western Pennsylvania against substituting spurious oils has received the approval of the Automobile Club of Pittsburgh. Mr. Gardner summoned the offending dealers to his office last week after Frank S. Douglass, Jr., chief of the department of investigation of the American Fair Trade Association, and Attorney J. D. S. Truxall, representing the Automobile Club of Pittsburgh, had presented evidence of substitution of oils to the District Attorney.

In warning the offenders, Mr. Gardner said: "I do not desire or intend at this time to prosecute you, but in substituting oils of a grade other than that asked for, you have violated the law of Pennsylvania, and if further evidence is presented to me of your continued substitution, I will take immediate steps to see that the law is enforced."

Attorney Gardner has expressed his approval of the methods employed by the American Fair Trade Association and the Automobile Club of Pittsburgh, and has requested that in cases of violation the evidence be submitted to him for action.

In commenting upon the action taken, Paul C. Wolff, secretary of the local club, pointed out: "The warning given to the dealers should be sufficient, but in case of a repetion we have the assurance of Mr. Gardner that he will prosecute the cases to insure the protection of the motoring public."

GUARD TIRES WITH GUAGE

"Over-inflation is as hard on balloon tires as under-inflation," says H. T. Miller, of the Goodyear service station, 3592 Bigelow boulevard.

"A good many people are careless," he said, "about using their air gauge, and run their tires up to 60 pounds of pressure, in that way losing some of the easy riding properties of the balloon tire, and shortening the life of the tire itself.

"You can easily notice the effect of over-inflation of tires. There is a sort of rear wheel chatter as they bounce over rough stretches of paving. Sometimes the tires leave the ground entirely, and spin before taking hold again, grinding off the tread rubber. At other times the rear end of the car weaves back and forth, especially when taking the turns.

"Tests made at the Goodyear factory recently of over-inflated tires showed that they gave only half of the mileage that the same tires did under identical conditions when driven properly inflated.

"A tire gauge will save the original purchase price many times—if the car owner will use it."

HUPP ADDS 390 DEALERS

Establishing new high sales records is only one phase of the tribute that has consistently been paid the three new "Century" Hupmobiles since their introduction. R. S. Cole, Hupmobile general sales manager, points out that applications from dealers for sales rights since the new "Six of the Century"—the first of the new models—was announced in October, have exceeded those made during any previous similar period in the company's history.

More than 1,000 applications for dealerships were filed during the four months to March 1, he reports.

"Sales to distributors and dealers during those four months twice broke all previous monthly records," he said. "March again will set a new high total.

"The demand for Hupmobiles everywhere has not caused us to lower the high standards we compel in our sales representatives. On the contrary, we are scrutinizing dealer applications very carefully, in accordance with our long-established policy. Only those who can bring the highest grade service facilities to the public are being granted the right to represent us. Of the thousand and more applications, we actually granted 390 of them during those four months."

DURANT PLANTS AT CAPACITY

The massive Elizabeth, N. J., plant of Durant Motors, Inc., is running at almost maximum speed. Two assembly lines are in operation turning out 500 cars daily. Nearly 4,000 workers are employed as against 2,500 in January. A third assembly line will be put in operation just as soon as production material can be obtained, stepping up production to 750 cars daily.

No holidays are being observed, and many departments are working overtime in an effort to overcome the avalanche of orders brought by the introducing of the new line of Durant fours and sixes in January. February orders from dealers for the new Durant four and six-cylinder models were greatly in excess of production, according to T. S. Johnston, assistant to W. C. Durant.

The present production schedule for March is 13,000 cars, but if material can be obtained this volume will be increased, and every effort made to give immediate delivery on all orders. The demands of this plant are being felt to such an extent that the Bendix Brake Company, whose brakes are used as standard equipment on all Durant fours and sixes, is planning an addition to its plant in South Bend, Ind., and the Continental Motor Company, builders of the Durant engines, have just recently completed several new additions.

BETTER TRUCKS THROUGH STUDY

Research, one of the great forces contributing to America's astonishing prosperity, is making one of its most important contributions in perfecting the modern truck—reducing costs and increasing the range of commercial transportation. This is the statement of W. N. Kelly, manager of the local General Motors Truck Company branch.

"Truck owners and users seldom think of this factor," Mr. Kelly declared, "because it operates 'behind the scenes,' and only the results are seen.

"But one has only to stop and think, for a moment, of the trucks in use a few years back; and to compare them with the fleet, quiet, handsome commercial vehicles of today. The contrast is startling.

"By careful organization and by use of modern equipment the benefits of engineering knowledge and experience are applied to study of commercial transportation problems. First the problems of truck users are studied, their needs analyzed. Then trucks to meet those needs are developed, step by step, and tested in the most thorough and practical ways."

An $18,000,000 plant has been completed at Pontiac, Mich., by his company, Mr. Kelly stated. This plant, largest and most modern of any devoted solely to the manufacture of commercial vehicles, is now in operation, producing the three series of General Motors trucks, covering the entire range of light duty, medium duty and heavy duty.

Pioneer

Hudson has pioneered many of the great advancements which make American motor cars the greatest dollar value of any commodity in the world.

It introduced and popularized such body types as the Sedan, Town Car, Speedster and Cabriolet.

It invented the Coach, which turned the entire industry to closed cars.

It invented the exclusive Super-Six principle which is still the industry's ideal of motor smoothness.

It developed the companion invention to the Super-Six principle, which turns waste heat to power. Together they combine the highest known efficiency in power generation and power transmission.

Hudson, too, invented the patented spring suspension, which makes these cars the easiest riding in the world.

BRITISH-DUTCH COMBINE BUSY LAYING FIRM FOUNDATION OF FUTURE WORLD 'OIL CORNER'

WARNING SOUNDED AGAINST DEPLETING U. S. DEPOSITS

Foolishly Drawing Upon California and Oklahoma Regions for Three-quarters of the World's Output, Year After Year, and by Using Petroleum Like Water, We Are Declared Playing Into the Hands Of Those Seeking Monopoly.

By ERNEST J. HOPKINS,
Special Correspondent, Hearst Newspapers.

WHILE our famous "oil teapot" boils hotly on, recent events apprise us that the great world cauldron of petroleum is boiling over, too.

There is a world oil struggle, and the prize in that struggle is your pocketbook and mine for infinite years to come. We are by far the world's heaviest petroleum users. Every man, woman and child in the United States uses up nearly seven barrels of oil a year—directly, in gas tanks and crankcases of 22,000,000 American automobiles, or indirectly, in goods manufactured, electric power generated, ships and railroads driven, by fuel oil.

One Thing We Must Have

More than half the oil used in the world is used by the American consumer. Our prosperity rests on cheap oil; our industrial, financial and personal lives are saturated with oil. Petroleum is one thing we MUST HAVE.

So it concerns us to learn what lies behind almost every item of oil news that is printed:

An "oil trust" has grown up in Europe, greater and more widespread than the American "oil trust" ever was in its prime.

It has successfully annexed the lion's share of the world's oil deposits, developed and undeveloped, in every foreign country on earth except Russia.

World "Oil Corner"

By so doing, this British-Dutch combine has laid firm foundation for a WORLD "OIL CORNER" in the future—not a complete "corner," of course, but one sufficiently powerful to control world prices and pinch the American consumer to the tune of unknown billions.

From the fancy prices we have paid for automobile tires, since our British friends "cornered" world rubber, we may safely infer "what price gasoline" to us, the day British world control becomes effective in petroleum!

To make it effective, two things only are necessary: A curb upon the Russian oil now held by the Soviets, and a little further exhaustion of the overstrained oil fields of the United States.

We ourselves, by foolishly drawing upon California and the Oklahoma region for three-quarters of the world's oil output year after year—and by using petroleum like water—are depleting our country's oil deposits at appalling speed.

Helping Foreign Monopoly

By so doing, we are playing directly into the hands of the foreign monopoly that is waiting for its golden harvest.

Cool statistical indication, based on all present facts, sets the date of world control by the British "oil trust" for the years 1933 to 1935.

And the arms or branches of this vast British monopoly are here in the United States—helping us to rid our country of its remaining oil, operating in the American oil industry on a very large scale, earning huge profits here which are sent abroad and help to carry the "trust" through its period of waiting—help it to conserve its foreign oil fields for that golden era, at our expense, which the British foresee.

Such is the general picture; which grows more spectacular as the details develop.

Several recent news items have forced the world situation upon American attention so that blindness to the facts is no longer possible.

Standard Oil of New York—"Socony"—Starts buying Russian oil from the Soviet government. And Sir Henri Deterding, the modern "oil king," leading figure of the great foreign "trust" to which I refer—is aggrieved.

Spectacular Threat

Deterding's Royal Dutch-Shell combine bought Russian oil itself repeatedly, from 1923 to 1926; but that is forgotten now, and he cables to New York the spectacular threat:

"I must insist upon, in India and elsewhere, American oil taking preference over stolen Russian Oil. I will fight this matter to the end and if necessary all over the world."

By result, a price war starts in far-away India—with an American oil company selling petroleum that comes from Russia, and a British oil company selling petroleum taken from the United States! Emissaries cross the Atlantic, conferences are held. Such "battle of giants" end, seldom in victory, usually in armistice, always in further exhaustion of American oil.

The second news event may well prove more important.

Secretary Wilbur, on January 24, disclosed that the Shell Oil Company of California—one American branch of the British Royal Dutch-Shell combine—ever since last June had secured our Navy's oil from U. S. Naval Oil Reserve No. 2, in California, and shipped it abroad in Dutch-Shell tankers, to be sold by the Royal Dutch-Shell, mainly in Japan.

Secretary Wilbur has appointed three admirals as a committee to stop, if possible, this grotesque proceeding. The quantity is small—only 8,000 barrels a day in an American average of 2,400,000 barrels—but the affair does show how low are our country's safeguards, in the face of the world-wide British operations and their trend toward world monopoly.

Must Conserve Oil

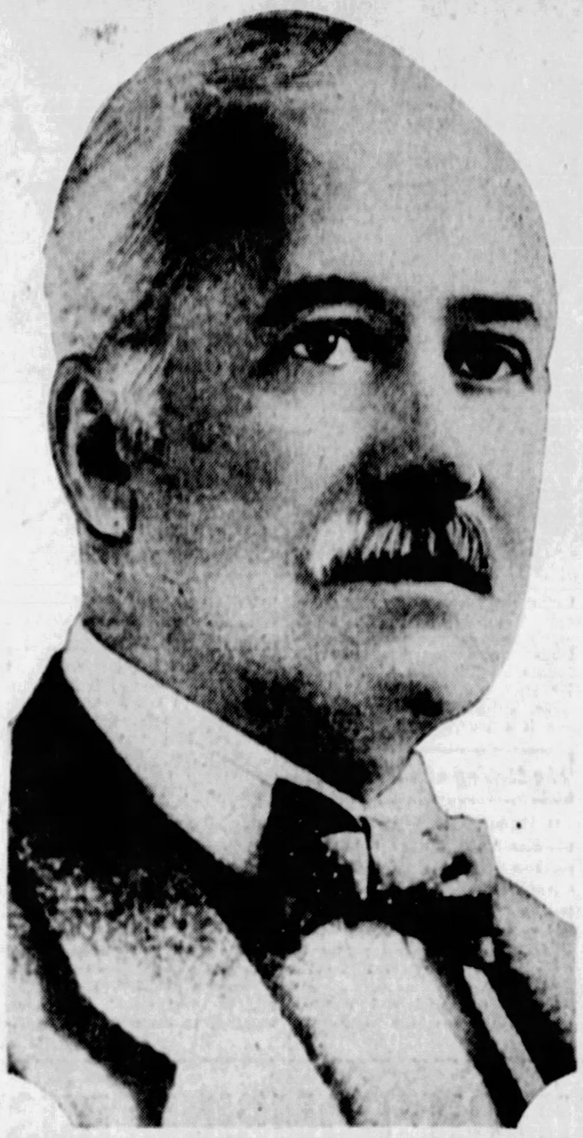
We Americans must CONSERVE OIL—to postpone paying the foreign monopoly price as long as we can.

And in the time gained by rigid conservation, our leaders must stake out AMERICAN RESERVES ABROAD—if such can still be found in the countries where petroleum exists. Once found, they must be CONSERVED.

Upon two huge oil groups and two or three minor companies—all variously interlocked so that they are in effect one—the British are depending for their future world-mastery.

Their official policy is to wait, rather than to produce their oil now.

A speaker in Parliament lately prophesied that, through this tremendous combine and its policy of conservation, "England would pay its war debt to the United States by the profits of British oil sold to the Americans."



A RECENT photograph of Sir Henri Deterding, the modern "Oil King," leading figure of the great foreign "trust" which is aiming to control petroleum prices and pinch the American consumer to the tune of unknown millions.

What has blinded our eyes is, principally, this very fact that the Britisher knows how to wait.

When an American company finds petroleum, it starts drilling the deposit without delay.

The British have bent their energies rather to exploring the globe, getting concessions to the oil-bearing areas everywhere, establishing world-wide marketing gains, feeding them largely with AMERICAN OIL—and WAITING.

So it comes about that 90 per cent of the world's known petroleum deposits, outside of Russia and the United States, and 10 per cent in our own country, rest in British hands today.

U. S. Production Greatest

Yet British oil production today is deceptively small. Royal Dutch-Shell production was but 10 per cent of world production in 1926. Anglo-Persian production was even less. Ours was 70 per cent of the world's!

Foreign oil in the ground is a quantity 12 to 14 times the American remnant. Yet the total drainage upon foreign oil fields has been only one-third our own output, year by year for many years last.

Such a policy of building for future world mastery requires huge patience, huge capital, huge organization, unified control.

The British "trust" has all these things.

It has had the capital of the Rothschilds, the Nobels, the British investors and bankers. It has its own amazing profits—recorded yearly dividends of 23 to 40 per cent—earned largely by the Shell, Roxana and Wolverine concerns in the United States, and by selling fuel oil to ships in every seaport in the world, 10 American seaports included.

Guiding Spirits

Its guiding spirits are Sir Henri Deterding of the "Royal Dutch"—a Hollander turned Britisher and British knight; Sir Marcus Samuel, head of the "Shell" portion of the combine, and Sir John Cadman, for years the British government's petroleum adviser, and now head of the "Anglo-Persian" combine, which the British government owns direct.

Lesser figures have been Weetman Pearson, or Lord Cowdray; William K. D'Arcy, Elliot Alves—pioneers all, who obtained vast oil concessions in various lands and ultimately connected them up with the "trust."

Mr. Richard Airey heads the executive committee of the important American branch of the Royal Dutch-Shell—the Shell Union Oil Corporation. This is the second largest concern in the $11,000,000,000 oil industry of the United States. It is a "holding company," with a large family of "subsidiaries" in our oil fields.

Mr. J. C. Van Eck is its president. Sir Henri Deterding, himself, though he seldoms visits our country, is listed as "chairman of the board" of his United States holding company.

That branch, be it here said, does not by itself constitute a "trust" in the eyes of American law. Our law and our "open door" policy take no account of how the overhead foreign ownership of an American subsidiary may or may not be organized.

The Shell of California, the Roxana in the Middle West and the Wolverine, with its 22 subsidiaries, are held in controlling ownership by the Shell Union Oil Corporation, which, in turn, is controlled 72 per cent by the Royal Dutch-Shell overseas.

Most Americans are slightly shocked to learn that the American invention, popularly known as a "trust," is by no means an American patent.

The British have outdone us in "trusts," and that in our own field—petroleum.

The first "trust" in the modern world was the old Standard Oil under John D. Rockefeller. Our government in 1911 "busted" that "oil trust" by separating its component parts. As result, we have 5,000 oil companies in this country today, and they compete.

Trusts "Oil Trust"

The British have no anti-trust law, and Great Britain does not "bust" her "oil trust"—she trusts it.

The British "lubricating system" starts at the top with a thing we lack — a government petroleum agency.

This was founded during the World War, with Prof. Cadman as director. When our petroleum war board disbanded after "floating the the Allies to victory" on a wave of American oil, the British agency continued keeping shop.

That agency co-ordinates all governmental oil and gasoline needs, advises with the private magnates and maintains the empire's petroleum policy, which declares:

1. The securing of oil concessions, anywhere on earth, is the duty of a British citizen and receives government support, including diplomatic backing.

2. No oil holding, once owned by a Britisher, shall ever be disposed of except to a British buyer.

3. At least one year's petroleum supply shall be maintained at all times within the British Isles.

Emulation Is Advised

There is so much that is admirable about this arrangement that to emulate it would be better than to criticize. We need such a bureau at Washington, to conserve American oil and to help obtain American reserves abroad.

The next link in the British system would be impossible in this country. Imagine the outcry if the following plan were attempted here:

The British government owns the Anglo-Persian oil Company, Ltd., one of the largest oil concerns in the world.

The government is the majority partner, and the private security-holders of the Burmah Oil Company, an influential Indian con-

Ludwig Feels Pulse of Chicago

World Famous Biographer Finds Happy Spirit of Optimism Keynote of American Life.

HULL HOUSE'S OPEN, WARM HUMANNESS SOOTHES HIM

"If Workingmen in Germany Could Send Their Sons to a University as They Can Here in United States, Socialism There Would Quickly Decrease."

By EMIL LUDWIG.

World-Famous Biographer of the Great, Who Wrote the Life of Napoleon and Other Noted Works, and Who Has Just Completed a Visit to the United States.

CHICAGO, March, 1928.

THE most beautiful modern building that I have seen is a tower in Chicago. There it stands alone, towering over all. Unfortunately kings do not do likewise. Astonished, one looks at it from all sides. It does not topple over!

DR. LUDWIG.

When one gazes from the height of the tower toward the north, the sea is spread before one's eyes. In school we were taught that New York is situated by the sea and that Chicago is on a lake, but it truly seems to me that it is vice versa: In New York one never sees the sea, but in Chicago one has the feeling of living by the sea.

This city of Chicago is much more beautiful and interesting than we had expected. It is also very European.

I have seen politicians in this city who look just like butchers; and the butchers here are far better-looking than the politicians. Perhaps the machine-like methods used in slaughtering have taken away all feelings of conscience regarding the thousands of deaths within the slaughter-house walls. Perhaps the men who kill the cattle are good and cheerful people with enviable nerves.

"Her Soul Always Has Suffered"

On the other hand, Jane Addams, who certainly never harmed a fly and surely never killed a pig, carries in her face the signs of suffering for the sins of the world. Perhaps her body suffers now, whereas her soul has always suffered.

That Hull House is wide open did not surprise me a bit. The minute one enters one understands the methods of Jane Addams. 'She does not shut herself off; instead, she sits or stands right in the room through which all must pass, whether coming or going, and she is always ready to answer questions or to give advice.

There are no unfriendly porters or secretaries who do not allow one to pass till they have put one in a certain category and referred one to a certain number.

The first step in Hull House leads one directly into a comfortable room with many pictures on the walls. One feels nothing of organization; instead, one has at once a feeling of being embraced and soothed.

The whole house seems to have grown into an organization—room by room—and not built according to a plan. It is absolutely feminine, and from an aesthetic viewpoint much better than the usual social establishments.

Most of all I liked the word "neighborhood," which I heard on all sides, for it showed me that here in the midst of Chicago's laboring class humane thoughts are found.

"The Best Way to the Goal"

It is a woman who is trying to help her follow-man; it is not a man trying to make the world fundamentally better.

Although this was not conceived as such a great undertaking, it has become the trial house for great social plans. Jesus preached only to the fishermen and peasants who came to the lake near His home. Perhaps this quiet way is the best route to the goal.

Julius Rosenwald does the same thing in another way. He has seventy thousand daily customers, so after a number of years he has been able to help the children of Germany and other countries and has given to museums and universities—all wonderful reasons which should give him a place in the Pantheon.

Surprising and very hard for the European to understand is the reckoning, to the smallest fraction of a cent, of the cost of a few pounds of soap, the expressage, the packing and the figuring how a fraction of a minute could be saved. In the end there is human happiness, but not for the reckoner and calculator.

But still it appears that just this social use of great wealth is a sport and a source of satisfaction to the great merchants of America.

Personally I was amazed, but I did not envy him his huge stores, in which one goes up and down, as if in the streets of the underworld, to get what is needed in the upper world. Down there one finds everything stored that can be possibly needed in the upper world.

"A Race for Superlatives"

Much more do I envy him his open hand—but most of all I envy him his catalogue of which 14,000,000 copies are published each year, making a record—something that an author, even in his wildest dreams, would never hope to achieve.

One is quickly lost here in the dangers of records and superlatives. I was shown a tower in Columbus said to be five inches higher than the Washington Monument; a swimming pool that is three inches longer than the one which was the biggest till then; and in each city the interviewers asked me whom I consider the greatest American and who, according to my opinion, was the greatest man who ever lived.

I kept asking myself and my friends if this race after superlatives did not mean a lack of incentive and a danger, and if it did not encroach upon public life. Otherwise it belongs to youth alone. People in their youth are always seeking new molds in order to find themselves and increase their sense of life.

"JANE ADDAMS carries in her face signs of suffering for the sins of the world. Perhaps her body suffers now, whereas her soul always has suffered."—Emil Ludwig.

When I see these new buildings I think of this youth, which daily becomes stronger, as the most decisive characteristic of America—America, which is so different from other lands. In talking with men and women, I get deep down into the weaknesses of this people, but they disarm criticism.

And anyway, why criticize? When one comes out of a dark, forlorn, poor and overcrowded house into a bright, new house, where all have room enough and almost all have light, one must not enter with the remark that the outside here is very fine but it is, after all—the outside.

The Reign of Happy Faces

The wisest men here have shown me their libraries, privately and publicly, the pictures on their walls and the programs of their concerts. Everyone feels the great mother—Europe. No one even wants to deny it. Shall we Europeans be haughty and overlook what this daughter has by herself achieved and discovered?

And has not America found what matters most of all—OPTIMISM—which of itself means half of human happiness?

I have not seen anywhere in Europe so many happy faces as I have seen here in every city and on every street, and I know that thousands have no reason to smile. It makes me think of Europe with her streets full of sulky faces—in fact, one sees nearly none but sulky faces.

Naturally, we cannot import all the American methods; but the haughtiness of Europe is unwarranted, and in truth it is only the envy that an old woman has of her blooming daughter.

In the neighborhood of Chicago I have noticed how in the modern schools the children are educated in public spirit, and I must compare it to the Russian methods. In spite of all the differences in principles the two countries, in contrast with Europe, educate the children for public life. Their playgrounds, sport, theater and debates resemble one another in that they fight the prejudice of wealth and inheritance. I know the tremendous difference.

The Power of Money

If, however, in Germany the workingman could send his sons to the university, as he can here, Socialism would quickly decrease. This fact was to me far more astonishing than that many working men in America own their autos.

In the universities I met the greatest minds of America. Boston was to me like a city of books, just as if I were in Stuttgart. The wonderful buildings of Columbia University, built upon a hill like an acropolis, amazed me with their names, all named after the founders just as in olden times one called the Madonnas of the great masters after the founder who allowed himself to be put in the picture kneeling in a corner before the Madonna.

In Columbus and in Chicago they have laid out magnificent parks. The discourse of the professors of all the faculties would bear comparison with the best in Europe.

In Iowa one of those states of which Hoover had told me, I found the best America. Here brains rule the city. There is not a trace of the power of money. The scholars and students show by their questions that they have a knowledge of Europe, and while there I often thought of that eternal fire that burns in the Cambridge Library in memory of a young man whose parents founded the library. This eternal fire burns everywhere unseen, and the flame of its spirit warms aspiring youth.

As I saw the students in the gymnasium, swimming and playing ball, I could not share the skepticism of the professor who feels that sport uses up too much energy.

His Falstaffian Voice

This state of Iowa was soothing to me after the turmoil of Chicago. I was truly happy to find a bath here that did not automatically run out; a faucet for hot water, out of which cold water came, and a real live horse upon the street. Everywhere there were old trees and at night it was so dark that one stumbled. On the street a strange man greeted me in a wild-west tone:

"Hello, Doctor, I know you from your pictures! I am coming to your lecture tonight. My grandfather was born in Tuebingen."

When I returned to Chicago I called upon Mayor Thompson, and before going made up my mind that by every possible means I would not start upon the subject of King George of England. Therefore, I spoke to him about the subway plans.

It seemed to me as though he was merely keeping me for a popular assembly and his mind was on the mass of people who were waiting outside, for here again the doors were half open. At any rate he refused the subject of the subway and suddenly

DON'T BE AFRAID TO BE AFRAID

Fear Not to BeConfused With Cowardice—The Danger of Too Vehemently Choking Down or Bottling Up.

Draining Off by Accepting In the Mind, Facing and Controlling Without Shame.

By HARVEY O'HIGGINS

Widely Known Through His Novels and Short Stories, "Clara Barron," "Julie Cane," "From the Life," and "Some Distinguished Americans," and for His Special Articles and Plays.

HE CAME back from the war decorated, as he said, in his khaki, like a can of Somebody's Gold Medal Mustard. He had enlisted when the Lusitania sank, and he got his first citation the first time that his company was tried out in a night attack. He made himself conspicuous, thereafter, with a kind of humorous recklessness that did not prevent him from being as cunning as an Indian scout, so that he took chances like a mischievous boy but saved himself, in the end, with shrewdness.

He became, finally, a sharp-shooter, sent out through the enemies' lines at night to lie hidden for days behind their trenches, pot-hunting them from cover in the midst of every sort of danger, hunted like a wild animal himself, alone against a whole army, and worming his way back through their lines again, like a spy, when his food was exhausted.

It was enough to give nervous prostration to a rattlesnake, but he came through it unshaken, in spite of a number of close calls, a shell-wound in his thigh, and a bullet in his shoulder.

SOME CONSEQUENCES OF THE ERROR

The trouble begins when the feeling of fear is accepted as cowardice and repressed. A strange thing happens. The fear continues to accumulate somewhere in the mind below the level of consciousness, and when the load has grown too great the body takes its own way of escaping from the danger, independently of the mind. The soldier suddenly goes blind, or he gets a paralysis of an arm or a leg, or he develops heart disease, or he breaks down with all the symptoms of some other incapacitating illness. The more conspicuously fearless he is, the more likely he is to suffer with some form of shell-shock.

A Coward Shamed Into Action

When it was all over, months after the armistice, and he was settled down again in his home, he went to pieces. He began with a mild attack of influenza, but when that was cured, he continued in bed, in an obstinate silence, and refused to get up, shaking with dumb terror at every sound, his blinds drawn and his door locked. The doctors diagnosed it as a case of shell-shock.

The physician who finally cured him got a strange story from him. He was a coward, this hero said, and he had always been a coward. As a delicate and timid child, he had two older brothers, both of them robust and daring athletes, who shamed him into doing everything that they did—riding, surf-bathing, hunting—though he had a deathly fear of horses, dreaded the sea, and hated to kill things. He even played football and made the college team as a quarterback, though he went into every game in a cold sweat of nervousness.

He never got free of his fear, but he learned to shut it off in one corner of his brain, where it served to keep him superhumanly quick and alert to every chance of the game while he played it. That was all right. The difficulty was to take the initial plunge that started him going. To do this he had to shut his eyes, so to speak, in complete recklessness, with an appearance of adventurous gaiety that deceived everyone. He was ashamed of his timidity and he concealed it perfectly.

In a Blue Funk About War

When the Lusitania was sunk he foresaw that the country would have to go to war and he was in a blue funk about it. The strain of waiting was so great that he decided he would never be able to endure it, so he volunteered at once, to end the suspense, and went into training. He decided that if he became an expert marksman he would have a better chance to defend himself; and shooting at the target he imagined that he was repelling an attack of the enemy, his mind alert with apprehension, pouring his shots into the bull's-eye with tense accuracy.

To his way of thinking, his whole record at the front was a consequence of his cowardice. His apparent recklessness was the blind jump with which he had to go into danger, and his coolness later was the cold tension of controlled fear.

"I'm a coward," he said. "I'm a rotten coward, and I always was, and I always will be. I was afraid not to play football. I did all the things my brothers did, for the same reason. I knew I was afraid to go to war. I was afraid I'd show it, if I waited, so I piled in, and every minute at the front I kept doing crazy things because I was afraid the others would guess how scared I was if I didn't shut my eyes and jump."

Man and Rabbit

The doctor pointed out to him that he was confusing fear with cowardice. Fear is an inevitable and automatic physical response to the threat of danger. It is the same in the body of a man as in the body of a rabbit. It produces ungovernable changes in the secretions of the glands, in the action of the heart, in the flow of the blood supply.

Nothing can prevent these changes from taking place, so that nothing can prevent the body from feeling fear. The brave man's body is as subject to this feeling as the coward's. The only difference is that the coward yields to the feeling and runs away, while the brave man controls the feeling and stands to fight—"or runs forward, as you did," said the doctor.

When the Body "Freezes"

Fear is inevitable. One of the heroes of the New York fire department, after a daring rescue, was asked by an admiring spectator: "Gee, weren't you scared?" The fireman answered, indignantly: "What's the matter with you? Don't you think I've got good sense? O' course I was scared."

All the professional dare-devils in the circus are as nervous as cats before they go in the ring to do their stunts. They know their danger and they are on the alert against every mischance. Among them, some years ago, there was an amateur bicycle rider who did a "leap the gap" on a wheel. He seemed completely fearless, and every time he went up on his high platform to begin his act, all the men and women in the dressing tent gathered silently, just inside the curtains of the entrance, and watched him till he landed safely. Then they drifted back, relieved, to their mirrors and their wardrobe trunks.

"Why do they do that?" I asked one of the clowns. He dropped his voice to answer: "He's a darn fool. He don't know what he's up against. One o' these days, he's goin' to break his neck. Somethin' 'll start to go wrong an' he'll freeze, an' then he won't be able to save himself."

When you "freeze," it is because a sudden fear that has not been prepared for takes possession of the body and stiffens it so that you cannot move a muscle. That happened to the bicycle rider a few months later, while the circus was touring the New England states, and he was killed.

The Thrill of Fear

There is a girl out in Hollywood, a professional dare-devil, who acts as a "double" for moving-picture heroines when they have to dive from cliffs on horseback, take parachute jumps from airplanes, or play a part in any other of the dangerous episodes of a film that is a "thriller." On Sundays and holidays she used to go with a speed maniac to the circular "bowl" that had been built for motor races. There they had found that when their car was running at its highest speed, the tilt of the track would carry the machine around the course unguided; and when the car was flying its fastest, the driver would release the wheel, and they would both throw their hands up in the air and yell. "Gosh," she said, "it's a great kick! When he takes his hands off the wheel, it gives you a cold chill."

Products of Repression

That thrill is the thrill of fear. She has brought herself to the point of enjoying it, as a devotee of the cold shower enjoys the shiver and the reaction from it. In spite of the strain of her work and the excitement of such recreation, she seems to suffer no ill effects. In her home, she is a normal, healthy person, living a normal, healthy life. "I've been running in luck, this year," she says. "I've only been on crutches once."

The trouble begins when the feeling of fear is accepted as cowardice and repressed. A strange thing happens. The fear continues to accumulate somewhere in the mind below the level of consciousness, and when the load has grown too great the body takes its own way of escaping from the danger, independently of the mind. The soldier suddenly goes blind, or he gets a paralysis of an arm or a leg, or he develops heart disease, or he breaks down with all the symptoms of some other incapacitating illness. The more conspicuously fearless he is, the more likely he is to suffer with some form of shell shock.

The doctors learned that a soldier, gone blind from shell shock, was on board a hospital ship that was torpedoed in the English Channel, and as soon as he found himself in the water his sight returned. The French physicians began using electricity to galvanize into action shell-shocked soldiers who were paralyzed.

Then it was discovered that such patients could be cured by hypnotism. The blind or the paralyzed man was put in a hypnotic trance and told, "There's no danger. The war's over for you. You'll not be sent back to the front." When he was wakened from the trance, his blindness or his paralysis had been miraculously cured. He did not know how it had been done.

To take the initial plunge, he had to shut his eyes, so to speak, in complete recklessness, with an appearance of adventurous gaiety that deceived everyone.

The Making of a War Lord

It began to appear that these patients were always the most fearless of men. They had consciously repressed their instinctive fear, in the mistaken idea that it was moral cowardice, and the repressed emotion had produced the physical symptoms that disabled them.

Such a repressed and unconscious fear was the animating emotion of one of the most conspicuous careers of the last century. The deposed Kaiser, Wilhelm II, suffered an injury at birth that gave him a paralyzed and withered left arm. His parents were disappointed to have a deformed heir, and they showed it. He began life as a timid and discouraged child, physically inadequate and emotionally unstable.

But as the heir to the imperial throne, he had to be a warrior. He had to be a worthy descendant of Frederick the Great and follow in the martial footsteps of his grandfather, who had ridden at the head of his troops into Paris at the end of the war of 1870. He had to be a conquering hero and a war lord. He set himself to conceal and repress his timidity, to overcome the handicap of his crippled arm, to learn to ride and to shoot one-handed, and to distract attention from his physical weakness by the robustious swagger of an incessantly active and blustering life.

Bluster and Bravado

He continued, none the less, at heart timid. He could dash into a dangerous indiscretion with a fine show of bravado, but as soon as he was well committed to a difficult situation he collapsed, and his official advisers had to extricate him by taking the blame for his actions and covering his retreat. A frightened part of the friction between them came to him, he wrote plaintively on the margin, "Because, on both sides, the Emperor is ignored."

At the end of the war he was practically a prisoner in military headquarters. Unable to decide anything, he allowed himself to be pushed into abdication and wavered into flight to Holland because it was the least decisive thing that he could do.

The moral seems to be that fear is an instinctive emotion that cannot be choked down and bottled up, below the level of consciousness, without danger of disaster. Like many another instinctive emotion, it will drain itself off harmlessly if it is accepted into the mind and faced there without shame. The war hero who considered himself a coward allowed his instinctive fear an entry to a corner of his mind at least, and it helped him through incredible dangers. He broke down later, with a mistaken sense of shame and guilt at the thought of his cowardice, when there was nothing to gain him the relief of action. The bicycle rider in the circus "froze" with fear because he had insisted on feeling fearless.

The Kaiser was betrayed into threatening bravado by his unconscious timidity, and he aroused a whole world against himself. The wise man, when he finds himself in danger, will say, like the brave fireman, "Of course, I'm scared. Don't you think I have good sense?"

Fear, in fact, is an instinctive and compulsive emotion that can be more easily kept from expressing itself in disastrous actions if it is allowed its freedom in frank thoughts.

THE COURAGE TO ADMIT FEAR

Fear is inevitable. One of the heroes of the New York Fire Department, after a daring rescue, was asked by an admiring spectator: "Gee, weren't you scared?" The fireman answered, indignantly: "What's the matter with you? Don't you think I've got good sense? O' course I was scared."

Every time the bicycle rider went up on his high platform to begin his act, all the men and women in the dressing tent gathered silently and watched him till he landed safely.

cern, own the minority shares.

Cadman is now the chairman of this unique Anglo-Persian group. On its board of directors, the British government appoints two members; they cannot initiate, but they protect their government by having a complete power of veto.

Arms of Oil Conquest

This Anglo-Persian is a huge concern—as large as any oil company in the world, if you judge, not on visible assets or production, but on oil in the ground. It has 500,000 square miles of oil lands in Persia, all but untouched—similar vast deposits in Iraq or Mesopotamia—it is in Rumania—it is in South America, too, despite the Monroe Doctrine, and of late it has even been trying to get a concession for an Atlantic-Pacific canal across the republic of Colombia, just south of Panama, all in the name of oil!

I find a list of 18 subsidiary oil corporations in various parts of the planet wholly owned by the Anglo-Persian and hence by the British government—and 12 others that are partly owned or controlled.

Such is the Anglo-Persian—the right arm of Great Britain in her oil conquest of the planet.

The left arm, so to speak, is the mighty Royal Dutch-Shell combine—the industrial Colossus of modern times.

This amazing world tangle of petroleum and shipping corporations is not only the largest "trust" on earth today, but the largest and most complicated "trust" the world has ever seen.

In the British petroleum army the Royal Dutch-Shell is the main attacking force. The Anglo-Persian, owned by the British government, is the huge reserve corps, while smaller concerns, such as the British controlled oil fields and the D'Arcy Exploration Company, are the scouts.

Sir Henri Wilhelm Augustus Deterding is the director of the Royal Dutch-Shell. If you call him by his stock nickname, "The Modern Rockefeller," you must place emphasis upon the word "modern."

For the Royal Dutch-Shell is as much greater than the old Standard Oil "trust" of 1911 as the petroleum, gasoline and fuel oil business of today is greater than the lamp oil business of "John D.'s" prime.

It is next to impossible to describe this vast combined. When our Federal Trade Commission investigated its American branches in 1923 the list of corporations in the world group was numbered 105.

By a recent statement—probably inaccurate—the number was given as 147. I doubt if Deterding himself could tell you without looking it up.

Buying Our Own Oil

While waiting for the British day to arrive, the Royal Dutch is picking up a living—a 23½ per cent cash dividend in 1926, 22 to 49 per cent for each year since 1912! Much of this profit is earned in the United States, selling American oil to Americans.

It all began with the "Royal Dutch," founded in the East Indies in 1890. The Shell Transport and Trading Company was an English shipping concern.

They merged in 1907, in a rather complicated way:

Two new operating corporations were formed, the Anglo-Saxon and the Bataafsche. These hold the properties.

The "Royal Dutch," becoming a holding company, took 60 per cent of the securities of each. The "Shell," also becoming a holding company, took 40 per cent of the securities of each.

Then they formed the "Asiatic" as the world-wide marketing agency. The subsidiaries in various lands are rouped under the Asiatic, the Anglo-Saxon or the Bataafsche as the case may be; and Deterding sits at the apex, as "managing director" of the whole.

The subsidiary companies have names in every language, are formed under every sort of law and produce, pipe, refine, ship and sell oil in every part of the world—including our own.

What kind of competition such a chain can give to smaller concerns, in the United States or out of it, can be imagined.

Subsidiaries—Associates

The Royal Dutch-Shell, once prevailingly Dutch, is controllingly British since the war, through ownership of shares.

So closely is it allied to the other British concerns, by purchase agreements, contracts and the like, that both the Anglo-Persian and the British controlled oilfields are called by some writers the "subsidiaries of the Royal Dutch-Shell." More strictly, they are its associates.

Such is the tremendous British oil combine—a nexus of governmental and private interests such as the world never before has seen.

Into its hands our ruinous American oil-flood is floating us with disquieting rapidity.

Only by slowing down that flood can we postpone the scheduled day of British oil control.

Only by obtaining new oil sources of our own, in the time before our domestic supply runs down, can we maintain competition and a competitive price for the fuel we Americans must have.

Perhaps our country has never faced a more serious economic challenge.

(Next Sunday various British leaders will be quoted as confidently predicting world control of oil for themselves, as the natural result of American wastefulness and their own enormous reserve supply. How rapidly our oil is vanishing will be shown by statistics.)

shouted at me in a Falstaffian voice:

"Do you know what King George allows our children to learn about the origin of our states? You do not know? Well, I am described as a German, but I am not a German nor an Englishman. I am an American."

He boomed at me so that it penetrated the overcrowded elevators outside and re-echoed from the marble walls of the city hall.

"Why do you always say King George?" I asked, during a breathing spell. "Do you mean by that the English government?"

Just then the telephone rang on his desk, and as he reached for the phone he said:

"Because all the English laws begin with the words——"

By now he had his mouth at the phone and he shouted into the receiver these words, which were meant for me:

"I, King George the Fifth of England!—Who is this?"

HINTS FOR A "DISLOYAL GENERATION"

Life Lived Without Loyalty to SOMETHING Is Declared an Empty Sort of Thing.

An Open Mind on Such Subjects As Patriotism, Religion and Family Is a Priceless Possession.

By KATHLEEN NORRIS.

SOMETIMES I think we ought to teach our children loyalty as we teach them the multiplication table.

Everybody ought to be loyal to something; a life lived without loyalty is an empty sort of life.

Loyalty isn't patriotism—although the two make a good combination. There is always something admirable in the person who loves his own country.

And loyalty isn't blind family pride, fond as certain complacent aristocrats are of confusing the two.

Loyalty isn't affection, enthusiasm, prejudice. It is something much finer and more subtle than any of these; it is a sort of extension of one's own entity, so that the goodness, badness, successes, mistakes, weaknesses and strength of the object toward which we are loyal, seem to us as excusable, as understandable, as our own.

"Life More Abundant"

You and I never lose faith in ourselves, even though we know ourselves to be often wrong, stupid and misled. And loyalty merely enlarges this central complacency to include something — somebody—else; it is one more form of finding "life more abundant."

It is the fashion nowadays to discard loyalties, as being unfit for a wide-awake, commonsense, practical nation. Loyalty has become the sign of a weak, conventional mind, clinging unreasoningly to its old superstitions and mistakes. We rather encourage the rising generation to laugh at loyalty.

But when they have been permitted to express their contempt for America, when they have been allowed to drop all religious affiliations as a lot of weak-minded bunk, fit only for timorous old women and psalm-intoning hypocrites, when college, and the Army and Navy, and their own home city—more, when the family itself, is all food for their scornful laughter—

Then what have we, to put into their lives and their characters that is one-half so precious as what we have taken away?

An open mind on all subjects, patriotism, religion, family, old associations, is a priceless thing. But plenty of deep thinkers, plenty of mental pioneers, have had their deep-rooted loyalties, too. In fact, I cannot remember ever contemplating a worth-while life that had them not.

Joan of Arc's Loyalties

Joan of Arc had her blind, pathetic loyalties. The king she served was a weakling, and the enemy into whose hands she fell did not accord her that generous treatment her loyalty to war had made her expect. But Joan is a great figure in the world today.

Napoleon was loyal. Edith Cavell was loyal. Catherine Booth was loyal. Lincoln was supremely loyal. Washington, freezing, tired, abandoned in the bitter winter campaigns, saw his own loyalty to a new ideal burning before him like a star.

The dictionary calls loyalty synonymous with "constancy." But that doesn't go deep enough. We are all willingly constant to things and persons while they please us. Everyone is loyal to America on the Fourth of July, or at the Washington's Birthday banquet, or when our country does something more than ordinarily romantic and generous.

Some years ago an American relief ship came into a certain European harbor, merely stopping to coal before she went upon her way of mercy.

Among the 500 persons who gathered on the docks to cheer her, about 20 of us were Americans. And as the beautiful craft—homely enough, really, neither unusually large nor new, but we had the flattened tums of 500 babies in our thoughts, and this ship was loaded with tinned milk and soup and cocoa—as the beautiful thing came slowly up the blue harbor waters, with a blue sky above her, and the horns and the band and our shouts welcoming her, and as one saw the beloved Stars and Stripes ruffle in the spring breeze—how American we Americans were!

America's Usual Way

How our throats thickened, and our eyes dimmed, and how our lips trembled as we told everyone within hearing that this was just America's usual way, God bless her. To send food to the starving was an everyday commonplace to her. And we actually began to talk about Washington and Betsy Ross and Bunker Hill.

But that occasion called for no loyalty.

Many a woman is constant to her husband because she wants to be. She really likes him, and beside, it means home, income, protection, children, position in society. But it doesn't mean loyalty.

No, loyalty is something more. It means that, loving me when I do the picturesque thing, the admirable thing, the thing you can understand, you love me still when I do something that isn't admirable or picturesque, the thing that puzzles and distresses you.

It seems to me that, looking at our children, we ought to ask ourselves seriously if they are loyal—not to this thing or that, but to ANYTHING? Would your child say a word for his country, his church, his mother, his small brother, his code, if he were put to the test? Is there anything to which he is loyal?

And if not, have you ever stopped to think what a dangerous business life is without loyalty?

Ethel White's Case

Ethel White's case is typical of a good many. She is 26 now, and she may easily live for another 24 years. And it is appalling to think what empty years they promise to be.

For Ethel belongs to the disloyal generation. She was the smartest member of a plain, small-town family, and while they were all admiring Ethel, she was despising them—humiliating her clumsy brother before her boy friends, making fun of her mother, refusing to go into her father's office at all, "because Pa was a sort of upper janitor!"

Enthusiastic friends, hearing Ethel sing in church, took up a collection and sent her away to study, and Ethel plunged into the Bohemian quarter of a European town, and became one of those eager, breathless Americans who not only abuse their own country, but who can't wait for opportunities to do so. Loyal Frenchmen, Englishmen and Italians used to listen amazed as Ethel tore down one of her country's institutions after another. When anyone said, "But aren't you an American?" Ethel laughed, and said, "Oh, don't!"

Long before this Ethel's mother had abandoned her own loyalty to her chuch, and Ethel was entirely free of any pitiful superstitions about God, or soul, or duty. She presently felt herself quite at liberty to take up her abode with a particularly weak, sad little foreigner, who already had a buxom wife and three children. He appeared to be rid of loyalties, too. Ethel frankly told her friends that she would rather do that than "eternally be taken for an American!" By this time she was speaking her mother tongue with a strong, but entirely incorrect, accent.

Her father and mother went on sending her money, and Ethel left her foreigner, who didn't seem even then to know what it was all about, and married another foreigner. She had two babies.

Returning Home

About six years ago she returned home to the little American town, wearing a single eyeglass, stumbling over the pronunciation of even such simple words as "concert" and "museum"—they were "consare" and "meosay'm," now—and unable to recognize the old friends who had given her her start. To use a modern phrase, Ethel "high hatted" her native town until it was thoroughly sick of her, and when she left it the second time nobody could endure the sight of her. She borrowed money to go away, abandoning her small son and daughter to the care of her brother's wife. The brother's wife has five of her own, and doesn't like Ethel anyway, so that the fate of the small Europeans is not enviable.

And all the time, in the 20 years I have known her, the note Ethel strikes is disloyalty. Years ago, Mamma was "crazy." Mamma "gave her a pain" — after that, America was crazy and gave her a pain, then her husbands were crazy and gave her a pain, and now it is poor little Franz and Mercedes, her children, at whom she sneers.

Sometimes Ethel makes new acquaintances laugh when she says saucily,

"I don't see why I should think a tiresome old man, who smells of his pipe, particularly interesting, even if he is my father! I'll say frankly that of all the people I detest in this world, my family comes first. My mother's a fat, kind, unutterably stupid old woman, who likes to cook and take care of sick people. As for people, why shouldn't I say frankly that I loathe children? I always have, always will, my own with the rest."

The new acquaintances laugh, but the old friends don't. And of course Ethel's father and mother, and her son and daughter don't find it funny.

Looking Ahead

The day may come when Ethel will return to her home town a second time—this time to stay. And it is possible that to find close behind her then, staunch and loyal and devoted, the pipe-scented old man, and the comfortable old woman who loves to cook and take care of sick persons, will mean the difference between life and death to Ethel.

Meanwhile, our cities are filled with these gabbling traitors; girls and boys living on the home money, sustained by the national ideals that make America the leader of the world, protected by the tenets of a creed that has created our civilization—whatever the faults of its votaries here and there—and broadcasting corrosive disloyalties wherever they can find a listener.

They read those acid magazines that find it amusing to ferret out the ungrammatical invitation to a colored camp-meeting somewhere, and make joyous capital of it, as a sign of illiterate America.

They dispose of all religions between two languid, bored puffs of a cigaret.

And when anything like home ties are mentioned, what a storm of superior laughter!

"My dear, this estimable character has to get home! It seems that darling hubby hates to come into a dark, empty house. What do you care what he thinks, aren't we having a good time?—You're not seriously thinking of going up there in all this rain, to meet the child? Let him wait. Well, what if he does ask a policeman and get taken to a station, it won't kill him!—and what do you think about Betty, isn't it delightful? We've all eaten her meals and borrowed her money, we've called her our friend, for several years, and now her people have simply shut down on the money, and she has to go back to this jumping-off place and help her father in the postoffice. Can you imagine Betty!—I think I could go. I'll park the baby with the janitor's wife. She drinks, but I daresay she'll save him if the house catches fire.—Here's a letter from my sister, with the usual story of sickness and trouble—I think I'll just forget it!"

When anyone said, "But aren't you an American?" Ethel laughed, and said, "Oh, don't!"

Fealty-Free Folk

All very jolly and complacent. But no loyalty—no loyalty—no loyalty. And from year to year one sees the viewpoint of these fealty-free folk growing cheaper, more superficial—their reasons for living at all becoming less and less.

The passionately absorbed little Salvation Army lassie has more than they have. The black-clad little nun, slipping upon her obscure way through crowded slum streets, has infinitely more than they have. The tired, anxious mother of small babies—the boy who goes home to have dinner with mother every night, because she is alone and old—the child who angrily, ignorantly stands up for an unworthy chum, the devoted adherent to even the poorest cause, the very soap box orator who stands ranting in the midst of a smiling, indifferent crowd, has SOMETHING—something fine and pure and constructive, deep within his soul.

Those sixteen million boys who were blown and hammered and frozen and starved to untimely death in the battlefields of Europe, did not win a victory for the cause they died to serve. They did not win a war "to end wars;" they did not make the world "safe for democracy."

Serves Its End

But all our lives and all history are enriched because of their dream, because they took everything that they had—youth, strength, hope and all the future—and poured it generously forth in loyalty to their flags. And if some day the world IS made safe for democracy, and if some day that bloodless war of brains and souls IS fought, "to end war," and is won, in our hearts and minds—after all, the only real battlefields—it will be because of these boys, and because, studying that pitiful loyalty that we had deceived them into using for a false and bad thing, we are sorry, and we have solemnly vowed that youth shall not be so betrayed again.

Loyalty serves its end, even when it is wrongly applied. The thing that fills our eyes with tears, in the play or movie, in fiction, and more than all, in real life, is loyalty. Not fidelity when we deserve it—but when we don't deserve it!

One of the most poignant instances I ever saw of it was in a juvenile court—that place of utter heart-sickness for the mother of boys. A spirited, stubborn, naughty, grubby little boy of perhaps 14 was up for reprimand, and the judge was inclined to send him to the reformatory. It was his third offense. This made his mother sob into the dirty little sweater of the baby in her arms, and all the other children wept in chorus.

The boy cried, too, and knowing something of the pride of a 14-year-old, something twisted like a hot iron in my soul, when I saw him, and my mouth filled with salt.

A small boy of 3 now advanced from the main group, and wound his arms about the criminal's legs. Tommy would not go home without Bud. Bud, it developed, always cut up his dinner, and put him to bed, and dressed him; Tommy and Bud were inseparable. Tommy now proposed to accompany Bud into jail. Tommy also furiously told the judge that his Bud couldn't do anything naughty.

Well, that was the end of that. But was given another chance and shouldered Tommy, and they all went away together. Ever since I've been wondering if any of the children in my own nursery have the precious and exquisite thing that made that small slum ragamuffin stand up so boldly for his shamed older brother, and carry him off into safety from the grim big grip of the grown-ups and the city and the law.

"TELL IT TO ELSIE" By Elsie Robinson

Have You the Right to Kill Happiness?

ARE you growing tired of Jim, Mary?

Tired of seeing the same homely face, day after day, year after year? Tired of picking up the same socks and collars? Tired of hearing the same old stories, listening to the same old grouch—

Yes, I know—once upon a time everything he did seemed wonderful. Just to hear his voice for a moment over the phone thrilled you all day. The touch of his hand, the sound of his key in the lock, set your heart rocking. That was before you were married and during those first dizzy months. But now—

Now you're like scratched old records to each other—wheezing out the same monotonous tune. And yet you're still young. And you know—how hungrily you know—that your heart could make new music if it had a chance.

Well—aren't you to have your chance?

Must you and Jim stick by each other for the rest of your dreary days just because you loved each other once, for a dozen dancing moons?

Haven't you a right to happiness—to freedom—to adventure? Must you be buried alive, like this, while other women go their romantic way?

Those are the questions you're asking yourself — aren't they, Mary? Asking them with growing impatience and resentment. Hating stupid, plodding Jim a little more each day because he stands in the way of your longing.

Yet every time you ask them, another question rises before you, stark and menacing — HOW ABOUT THE CHILDREN?

How about 10-year-old Eddie, and 8-year-old Sister and the merry little lad who's just beginning to toddle?

Jim isn't stupid and tiresome to them. He's a strong, powerful, wise god, a valiant soldier, a jolly comrade. He's everything that is kind and tender and strong and true to young Eddie and Sister and Baby Tom. And their little lives cluster about him like flowers around a great, friendly tree.

What will happen if you take that tree away and let in the storm and the parching sun? How will the house seem to them without Dad's friendly laugh, his kind, strong hands, his twinkling eyes?

You want YOUR chance, Mary—but how about THEIR chance?

Here is the answer of a mother who faced your problem and chose to take her chance. I do not know who wrote this letter. It came to me this morning, wailing down the wind, and the echo of its despair is in my heart as I write. The press and the pulpit are filled with protests against broken homes. No protest was ever more poignant than the cry of this mother, who, by her own will, robbed her babies of their father.

Dear Elsie—

I am a divorced mother with three little children and I am thinking long thoughts these days when I read the many discussions concerning this Mrs. Burnham who sent her eugenically selected mate on his way and had her baby for herself. I would like to give my own story in answer to those discussions. I KNOW what it means to raise children without a father—they only theorize.

My former husband and I were children of broken homes and we were therefore selfish and one-sided, and made each other thoroughly miserable. For my own part I am happier without him. But the children and their need come before either his right or mine. They are in the making. And for my children I am so sorry and wish so much that he were here for their sake.

THERE IS A FEELING OF SECURITY FOR A LITTLE FELLOW WHEN HE HAS A DAD.

A few weeks ago my 4-year-old boy went into an adjoining apartment to visit a little boy who had moved in a short time before. Very soon I heard sonny running as fast as he could to me shouting—"MAMA! MAMA!" I wondered what had happened. Then he ran in through the door, his face all aglow with excitement and joy, and cried—"OH, MAMA! MAMA! BUDDY'S GOT A DADDY!"

Then, after giving me the glad news he ran back into the other little boy's apartment and I could hear him following the little boy's father around and calling him "Papa."

Can you imagine how I felt, Elsie—and how I pondered about the future of my children?

Only the other day my 8-year-old boy was playing on the sidewalk with another boy, while I watched through the window. I heard my boy say to the other child, with pride in his voice, something about his dad. The other boy looked up quickly and said—

"Huh! You haven't got a dad."

My boy said— "Why, I have, too!"

The other little fellow said with a sneer, "Well, then, where is he? Why don't he live with you?"

And my little fellow walked off without another word, a hurt, bewildered look on his face. There was nothing he could say.

It was not fair to quote "worthless fathers" as an excuse for depriving a child of a father. THERE ARE JUST AS MANY WORTHLESS MOTHERS AS WORTHLESS FATHERS. We are most of us just average and there can be no question as to the deep, tender, unselfish love of the average father for his child.

THERE CAN BE NO HAPPINESS FOR THE MOTHER WHO CHEATS HER LITTLE CHILD OUT OF A FATHER'S LOVE TO SERVE HER OWN SELFISH ENDS.

A child without the love of both parents is like a boat with but one oar—

A Mother.

There is a picture of one broken home—a picture you will not easily forget if you have a sensitive heart.

But does this mean that women should endure any torture or humiliation to keep their children with the father?

It does not. There are degrading marriages — and worthless fathers who are more of a bane than a blessing to their children. But the majority of marriages are not degrading—the majority of fathers are not worthless. As this mother has said—"We are most of us just average." We conjure up pictures of mental agony and spiritual humiliation to excuse our own restlessness, and our desertion of our duties. But as a matter of plain fact, the average unhappy wife isn't greatly humiliated nor pained. She'd have to endure twice as much inconvenience and unfairness if she worked in any office under a grouchy boss, and in her heart she knows it. But she's sick of her job—and she's trying to work up a case for herself to justify her desertion of that job.

That's easy to understand. We all like to rationalize our cussedness. And it's human to weary of life in a rut. BUT IF WE'D PUT HALF THE ENTHUSIASM AND IMAGINATION INTO OUR HOME SERVICE, WHICH WE DO INTO OUR DREAMS OF FREEDOM, WE'D SOON BE OUT OF THE RUT, AND MARRIED LIFE INSTEAD OF SEEMING A CRUEL SACRIFICE, WOULD TAKE ON ONCE MORE THE TENDER TINGE OF ROMANCE.

ISN'T LOVE LOVELY

By FANNIE HURST

Somersaulting "Sisters" Are Hit By Cupid At Same Time.

Dancing Act Is Saved.

THE remarkable thing about the vaudeville act known as "Duvene Sisters" was not that they were not sisters, most sister-acts aren't. But in this case, the two yellow-haired, blue-eyed, nimble-kneed, buck-dancing, somersaulting "sisters" were mother and daughter.

Marcia Duvene had been born in a theatrical boarding house and reared in her mother's dressing room. Marcia was just 18 years older than her daughter Elsie. She looked so few of those 18 years the elder, that even in the [illegible] world where [illegible]ry but a ne[illegible] [illegible] a sort of [illegible] wonder.

There was really only one kind of light that could reveal the actual difference in the ages of Marcia and her daughter. God's daylight. And since Marcia and her daughter were seldom exposed to it, the illusion of the sisterhood of these two from behind the footlights, at least, was about perfect. For that matter, even to behold them walking down the street revealed scarcely more than five years between them. Those differences lay in the tiny shadows beneath Marcia's eyes. And perhaps in the slightly loose muscles of her face.

But temperamentally, where the wrinkles did not show, never were two sisters more en rapport than Marcia Duvene and her lovely Elsie.

They slept together, they awakened together, they gossiped together they lived together, they hated together, they lived the full and busy, the picayune, the carefree and the irresponsible life of the theater together.

IT IS doubtful if Elsie, who was her mother all over again, ever thought much of the strangeness of the situation. She had never known her father, who had died one month before her birth; her first crib had been a trunk and for as far back as she could remember, her mother had been someone who could turn a double somersault, flounce a naughty ballet skirt and combine sweetness and tenderness and a bit of temper, with youth, nonsense and a strange wisdom that might have been maternal. But not so that you could notice it.

They thought, these two, not as mother and daughter, but as sisters. Stormy little scenes between them invariably ended in tearful reconciliation. They dressed alike with the rather startling naivete of the theater, and even in the day of the sophisticated little silhouette of the modern, bobbed-hair flapper, went about in poke bonnets with pale blue facings and yellow ringlets dancing to their shoulders and pastel-covered frocks in which they traveled.

TWO pretty women. Pretty in the same way. Just the right sort of prettiness for successful vaudeville performers.

Cheerfulness, too. A smile and a glimpse of white teeth gleaming between parted, curved lips. A smile that bespoke friendliness, a happy, carefree attitude toward life, a feeling that each day was worth living for the fun and happiness it held.

They were the typical vaudevillians, all right. The usual brand of "sister-act." About the same height, same weight, same accomplishment. Marcia was a little taller than her daughter and had a contralto voice which blended passably with Elsie's fluty little soprano.

Elsie was the most accomplished dancer—after all, the years were irrevocably in Marcia's bones—but Marcia still closed their act on the "split" done with a litheness that Elsie could not equal, much less surpass. They were not "big time" players. They were not sufficiently outstanding in any manner whatsoever for that, but by the time Elsie was eighteen, they had been averaging forty weeks a year for five years. They were a staple act.

IT WAS as the lovely Elsie crept up toward her late 'teens, that fears, apprehensions and dread began to creep out of the placid years that Marcia had enjoyed with her daughter as her private own. It began to dawn upon Marcia, as men's eyes turned more and more upon the loveliness that was Elsie's, that life was about to break in upon the placidity of which she was so greedy.

It is true that throughout the years of Elsie's little girlhood, men's eyes had not failed to turn toward Marcia. But Marcia's indifference to them was the indifference of a woman who is satiated with contentment. Her life with her daughter was sufficient unto itself and so there had arisen no problem. But now suddenly, the disquieting awareness had come to Marcia that Elsie was desirable.

To Elsie, her adolescence came as a surprise and a delight. The youths who paid her homage were as novel as they were stimulating. Life was suddenly a Christmas tree hung with sparkling ornaments that seemed within her reach. Watching, Marcia knew that she was helpless.

Helpless as any doting mother is when her daughter reaches the age when youths pay her homage. Close as was the bond between mother and daughter, delightful as was their companionship, Elsie's youth craved the homage that was offered to her. Craved it and answered to it as normal, happy, healthy girlhood does answer.

Elsie was unconscious that anything had happened. All she saw was that the world was a rosier, happier place, that it was a more joyous thing to be alive. That she had more joy to give, more love and affection to give, than she had ever known before.

Elsie knew nothing of the struggle that was going on inside Marcia's troubled breast. Knew nothing of the hours of panic and trouble. Hours, almost, of jealousy. Jealousy that anything so completely lovely and satisfying as her companionship with her daughter should be disturbed. For Marcia knew that it would be disturbed. Knew that she was helpless before the call of youth to youth, love to love.

AND then there began in Elsie's mother the fight to maintain her place in the affection of her daughter. She did it by entering the competition, so to speak. Elsie's wooers found themselves after a while, bewildered between the two of them; the rather dazzling charm of the mother, the less-sure, but nonetheless appealing charm of the daughter.

For every corsage that arrived at Elsie's door, another and sometimes two arrived at Marcia's. Often, with her feet aching and her throat aching and her heart aching, Marcia and one of the youths accompanied Elsie, whose feet and throat and heart were not aching, to dance or cabaret.

And all this Elsie took for granted as part of the natural regime of mother and daughter. It was natural to her since she had never known anything else.

The obvious entanglement which might arise in such a situation as this did not occur. There was never a moment that the affections of these two women fastened themselves upon the same individual.

The youths who milled around the "sisters" were amusing as so much pastime. In her own naive little way, Elsie had a curiosity of maturity. She loved the light, the glitter, the adulation, the adoration that went with her sweetness and charm, but there was nothing in these transient young men that seemed capable of fastening her interest or her emotions.

It seemed to Marcia in her secret fears and dreads and heartsickness, that she could never be grateful enough for this. This girl, who was her life and almost as much a part of her as the very feet upon which she danced, who might ultimately break her heart when the time came to give her up, at least where affairs of the heart were concerned, was no scatter-brain.

Together, like any two sisters, they twitted and scoffed over their suitors and exchanged intimate jokes after they were tucked into bed at night and gossiped over their breakfast cups with all of the school-girl absurdities of the undergraduate social world.

IT WAS in a town called Bradford where they had played many a time before, that Marcia and her daughter met a man named Grover, who had recently taken over the management of the theater in which they were appearing. He was a well-preserved, jovial sort of fellow, enormously fascinated by the world of the theater that was so new to him, a person of fresh, unjaded spontaneity.

The second night of the "Duvene Sisters'" engagement, he invited them out to late supper and brought along as a foursome his own son, Raymond Grover, a young physician of the town.

Then ensued one of those whirlwind situations that frequently happen in books, but occur with the greatest rarity in life. It was a case of love-at-first-sight on the part of two adult males.

For the three subsequent weeks, Lester Grover and his son Raymond followed from town to town the "sisters" who had so dazzled their vision and their imagination.

To Marcia and her daughter, something incredible and too delightful to analyze had befallen.

They were in love. The rest tells glibly, easily and romantically. It is one of those stories that works itself out to the satisfaction of all concerned, but perhaps with the possible exception of one condition. And up to now, with the two handsome households of Marcia and her daughter so comfortably established in the town of Bradford, there is no reason to believe that this condition is ever going to matter to the detriment of anybody's happiness.

The condition, however, is this: Lester Grover, the father, married Elsie.

Raymond Grover, the son, married Elsie's mother.

IT was one of those whirlwind situations that often happen in books, but occur with the greatest rarity in real life.

It was a real case of love at first sight. Dazzling, impetuous, sincere love that was too incredible, too delightful, to analyze.

The BOOK SHELF For Readers and Writers by George Seibel

Batting the Bard

SINCE Mark Twain and Tolstoy announced that Shakespeare is dead, and that he was a blooming aristocrat anyway, Bernard Shaw has confessed to writing better plays himself and the Baconians have trotted out several new candidates for the honor of authorship, their slogan being "Anybody but Shakespeare." Now comes Mr. Hubert Griffith, who apparently is a dramatic critic in London Town, with a book entitled "Iconoclastes," in which he sets out to give the Bard decent burial, but ends by placing him on a higher pedestal than before. There must be something in this poet Shakespeare after all.

Mr. Griffith's "Iconoclastes" is one of that series of disturbing little books published by Dutton in which all our ideas and traditions of religion, morals, taste, and life in general are made to stand on their heads like Bohnen in "Pagliacci." This particular volume is concerned with "The Future of Shakespeare," and at first one is inclined to wonder why a book, ever so small, should be written about a dramatist who obviously has no future. Mr. Griffith starts out with a definition of the word "classic" which makes it practically synonymous with "dead." Then he follows with his own definition, "A classic is simply a work of such intense vitality that it is always modern," which everybody will be inclined to accept. But when he picks out a sample of a dead drama to illustrate his point he pens the most amazing paragraph of balderdash that could be evolved. Listen to it:

"'Oedipus,' in whose string of crudities and impossibilities no human being can ever have believed, is a true classic of the pedants, worthy for ever to be played in glaring masks and two-foot stilts, and whatever other ingenuities may bring it nearer the Mumbo-Jumbo solemnities of a South-Sea Islander. It is a bedlamite play. Its hero has it predicted to him that he shall murder his father and marry his mother. He thereupon goes out and slays the first old man that he sees, and pays his addresses to the only lady of forty whose identity he never bothers to discover. The common sense of an imbecile would have counseled him better."

Soon we pass on to Shakespeare, who appears to be "violently unpopular." It is true that people go to see his plays, but that is because they are drawn by a star or some scenic and spectacular effects. After witnessing that "charming pantomime" which is known as "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Mr. Griffith moralizes that "if the twelve most beautiful Follies girls were set to dance a ballet on the heath in 'Lear,' or 'Macbeth's' three witches were turned into three nymphs and winners of international beauty competitions, these plays also would be more frequently produced."

But as in the old melodrama, a hero is waiting around the corner to rescue the imperiled fair one—in this case the fame of the Bard. "The finest effort ever made on behalf of Shakespeare in the modern theater was made when Sir Barry Jackson and H. K. Ayliff produced a modern dress 'Hamlet' in London in October, 1925." It must have been a fine performance, an intelligent performance, if Mr. Griffith's description is to be taken as a faithful reflection. Quite properly he realizes that Shakespeare in modern dress is nothing new—Garrick played it that way—and quite inevitably he realizes in the closing pages of his booklet that no producer can kill Shakespeare by any atrocities of orthodox tradition or radical innovation. It just happens that Shakespeare is a classic in Mr. Griffith's sense—that he is always modern, that his Rome is of all ages and his Bohemia is anywhere—so what's the use of writing about the future of Shakespeare when past, present and future are intrinsicate with Einsteinian relativity?

Much of Mr. Griffith's criticism of Shakespearean acting is to the point. There are atrociously bad actors, and they have played havoc with the fine feathers of the Swan of Avon. Every count in Mr. Griffith's indictment counts. Take his comment on Laughter, for example:

"It is a commonplace in everyday life that a man who laughs at nothing is an imbecile. Either because the producer tells them to, or because the producer is slack and doesn't tell them not to, half the characters in any Shakespearean play will be endeavoring to prove themselves imbeciles. It is felt that a Shakespearean comedy must be accompanied by laughter. If the audience will not supply it, the actors will."

That is sound sense—and it emphasizes the important point that the characters of Shakespeare should be played as if they were human beings, not graduates of an elocutionary college. Mr. Griffith writes discriminatingly of the "Old Vic," that shabby playhouse over on the Southwark side of the Thames, not so far from Shakespeare's own Globe. At the "Old Vic" Shakespeare is played with some approach to this sensible style. I have seen "Measure for Measure" there, and it might have been a play by Pinero or Maugham. "Antony and Cleopatra" was somewhat more in the hifalutin manner. The "Old Vic" and Sir Barry Jackson have both proved the same thing—that Shakespeare is not dead. So we come to the fine moral at the end of Mr. Griffith's book:

"Once train up a group of actors strong enough to realize that ruffs and doublets have no more lien on the play's meaning than have white collars and black coats—and ruffs and doublets, white collars and black coats become alike of equally little importance. Truth to the living spirit is all."

So our Iconoclast learns at last that the living spirit can't be smashed. And we suspect that he knew it at the first.

Algeria from Within

R. V. C. Bodley has been a sheep-breeder on the Sahara, and has engaged in other business in Algiers. His book, "Algeria from Within" (published by Bobbs-Merrill), gives a very picturesque account of the Arabs in North Africa, with geographic and historic lore that could be found nowhere else. It is a land of strange survivals and weird fancies. Again and again, he tells us, one will meet people who will tell you that dragons live, and that there are people who have seen them and spoken to them. Yet this is the age of science and civilization. In spots, at times, perhaps!

The Immortal Adventure

A book about the new Palestine, the dream-land of Zionism, has been written by Irma L. Lindheim in "The Immortal Adventure" (published by Macaulay). She is president of the Hadassah, a national organization of Zionists. During her visit to the Promised Land she has seen new social values, new economic values, and new spiritual values tried out for the first time on a national scale. She views the great experiment hopefully and optimistically. The book contains much that is of general interest, along with some mere family gossip.

The Crime Wave

The Greene Murder Case

"It's a deuced drab world without a nice murky murder now and then, don't y' know?" is Philo Vance's philosophy of life, set forth on page 22 of "The Greene Murder Case" (published by Scribner). S. S. Van Dine, who wrote the ingenious tale, supplies his detective with an assortment of harrowing and mysterious murders. They come thick and fast under the very noses of the police, in the old Greene mansion, overhanging the East River, and inhabited by a morally decadent family all of whom hate all the rest. The sure-fire execution of the murders, even when a mere bootjack is the engine of destruction, will nonplus the reader somewhat, but when he learns that it is all set down in the immortal Handbook of Criminal Jurisprudence by the illustrious Gross, contained in the great criminological library willed by old Greene to the New York Police Department, all doubts must vanish. For this tale is a learned piece of thrills and shudders. There is even a butler who reads Martial, and a housemaid who is a scriptural authority. Words like "archiater," "adytum," "aphonia," and "anamnesis" are bandied about with careless abandon. But we get intriguing diagrams of all the rooms where the various massacres are perpetrated, and Philo Vance delivers a gorgeous rhapsody on Amontillado sherry, and of course the guilty wretch that did the murderous deeds is the person least to be suspected. So the erudition will be swallowed with the sherry and the thrills in this tale far ahead of the ordinary run of Sherlockery.

The Square Emerald

A particularly well-written mystery story by Foster Johns is "The Square Emerald" (published by John Day). The emerald is stolen from the safe of Donald Terrence. The same evening Terrence is found murdered and the safe rifled, so the police deduce that to find the murderer they must find the gem. As a result the emerald is like a red-hot coal, whoever possesses it wants to be rid of the stone. The mystery is finally solved by a detective no less baffling than the mystery itself. Mr. Johns has a refreshing style and his tale is exceptionally good.

Jig Saw

Eden Phillpotts, one of the foremost of English writers, does not disdain to write detective stories, and in "Jig Saw" (published by Macmillan) he has given John Ringrose, his favorite detective, one of the most puzzling of murders to solve. The crime is committed in a steel room, locked and bolted on the inside, and absolutely impregnable. Gruesome, baffling, and yet logical, this story is in Phillpotts' best manner.

The Murder at Fleet

Eric Brett Young, in "The Murder at Fleet" (published by Lippincott), has evolved a novel and striking method of concealing a murdered body, a method both gruesome and spectacular. He also explains a seemingly impossible series of events in a way to satisfy the amateur sleuths among his readers.

Shadows

The inimitable Disher is no ordinary detective, but a man of means who solves mysteries just for the joy of demonstrating his superiority. Will Scott has fixed up a formidable mystery for him in "Shadows" (published by Macrae Smith Co.), but Disher solves it to the satisfaction of his own amusing ego and also to the satisfaction of the seeker after thrills.

Juvenile Mysteries

"Spindle Spooks," by Zillah K. MacDonald (published by Appleton), is a mystery story for girls—with a haunted house full of thrills even for grown-up readers.

"The House of Many Stairways," by Hammel Johnson (published by Appleton), tells how some young people, spending a summer in a haunted house with a superstitious Negro mammy, succeeded in clearing the mansion of its uncanny reputation.

The New Fiction

Meat

Angrily, almost, one puts down the novel Wilbur Daniel Steele has titled "Meat" (published by Harper), with the feeling that it might have been a masterpiece and just missed being a botch. He takes Paul's words, "If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh," and applies them to the temptations of sex and alcohol as they assail three children in one family—two boys and their foster sister. The younger boy is born with a bulbosity over one ear—and the father knows what this means, for all the children in his wife's family line born with such horns have been moral weaklings as well as degenerate in body. But the mother determines to fight for her boy by removing all temptation from him, keeping him fenced in. This results in making ascetic cowards of the two healthy children.

These struggles are told with frequent flashes of profound insight and felicitous expression—but one cannot read by flashes. Sometimes one wonders what Mr. Steele is trying to tell; sometimes one knows, and wishes he had taken the time to tell it properly. He seems to have been infected by the mannerisms of Fannie Hurst and Ernest Hemingway, both great writers with a tendency to become incoherent and cryptic.

Mr. Steele says of Doctor Blakeley that "he lacked the one thing that makes a doctor a great doctor, an imagination." Mr. Steele himself seems to lack the one thing that makes a writer a great writer, a clear vision of his characters, within and without. The result is foggy psychology and weak motivation. In this book, for example, it is impossible to believe in the knocking down of Rex which results in Flagg's flight from home, and equally impossible to believe in the drinking orgy that results in Rex's death.

It is altogether a murky book, a hesitant book, an unfinished symphony. Would that Mr. Steele had taken the time to ripen and clarify a vital theme. Heredity is no longer the simple thing it was in the day of Ibsen's "Ghosts," nor even as easy to interpret mathematically as Gregor Mendel seems to show. But no family could ever be as terribly obsessed by Sin as these devil-haunted Indias.

Second Radio Audition to Seek Best Amateur Voices

TEN AWARDS TO BE GIVEN IN NATIONAL TEST

Local, State, District Hearings to Be Conducted by Atwater Kent Foundation.

PHILADELPHIA, March 24.—The Atwater Kent Foundaton announced today that it will give $17,500 awards in connection with its National Radio Audition. A. Atwater Kent, in announcing the new audition, said:

"The results of the national audition of 1927 were so splendid that the Atwater Kent Foundation has authorized another contest during 1928. I am proud that our efforts to discover young amateur singers in every state, and to give them the opportunity to be recognized, produced 10 such superb voices as were heard in the final competition in December.

"Great success in their musical careers has been assured these 10 young men and women, and the world of music lovers will enjoy hearing them and reading of their achievements for many years.

"It has been a source of gratification to feel that in every state the cause of good music has been advanced—as I have been assured it has. Fifty thousand young singers, scattered among 1,000 communities, participated in the audition last year, and I have been informed by musical leaders from all parts of the country that the effect of that activity has been distinctly beneficial to the listening public and to amateur singers generally.

"Ten finalists chosen from local, state and district auditions will compete in New York City in December, when the following final awards in five groups will be divided among five boys and five girls, with identical gifts to a boy and a girl in each group: First, $5,000, two years' musical tuition and a gold decoration; second, $2,000 and one year's tuition; third, $1,000 and one year's musical tuition; fourth, $500; fifth, $250."

If Too Fat—Reduce!

By DR. THEODORE BECK

In the past ten years science has made great strides in learning the mysteries of human personality. In the study of the ductless glands, it is asserted that man or woman can be thin or fat, tall or short, ugly or beautiful, dull or brilliant, depending upon the secretions of the ductless glands.

Greatest and surest results have come from clinical experience with the thyroid gland. Obesity, or overfatness, is often due to the failure of the thyroid gland to function correctly and by adjusting this fault, through the use of a scientific formula, obese persons lose from 5 to 15 pounds in 30 days. Many report reductions of from 40 to 70 pounds and their joy knows no bounds.

For some years, I have been recommending 5-grain Arbolone Tablets to those who wished to reduce. The constantly increasing demand for these tablets, their approval by many physicians and chemists, and the many grateful and thankful letters I receive, indicates that reductions are attained without any harmful results to the users. On the contrary, many report improvement in health, complexions and feelings. By permission, I am publishing a few of the many letters received.

Reduced Weight Quickly—Easily

EVANSTON, ILLS., Mrs. Joseph A. P——, — Reba Place, writes: "Have taken one box of Arbolone Tablets and lost 10 pounds in one week, and have purchased another box, as I intend to take until I get back to normal, etc." (A later letter reads): "Before taking could not walk upstairs without being out of breath; could not walk any distance without becoming exhausted. I can now do both without being winded. Am down from 172 to 158 pounds in just two weeks. Thanking you, etc."

Reduced 12 Pounds in 30 Days

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, Helen McG———, — Sheridan Road, writes: "After having taken Arbolone Tablets thirty days, I wish to tell you how pleased I am over results. I have reduced twelve pounds, and have eaten just what I wanted. Will "After having taken Arbolone Tab-

Arbolone Reduced Satisfactorily

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Mrs. M. M———, — Claridge St., writes: "Have used Arbolone Tablets and have found them wonderful. Have taken 6 boxes and have lost considerable weight, and am still taking them. They take all the puffed feeling away and make you feel fine." (A later letter reads): "I have received great satisfaction from Arbolone Tablets and cannot praise them too highly, as I believe in giving credit where credit is due, etc."

Reduced 7 Pounds First Week

PENN YAN, N. Y., Mr. Chester M. H———, — Cornell St., writes: "Two weeks ago I purchased a box of 5-grain Arbolone Tablets, took them as per directions and the first week reduced seven pounds, and already feel much better. I weighed 193 and am sure that in a few weeks I will get back to my usual weight of 160, etc."

Arbolone Tablets are sold by all the May Drug Co. stores and all good druggists everywhere.

Stars of Theater and Movie Lot in Two Programs

Screen Folk Will Speak of Fashions, Love and Well Being in Cross-Country Hookup

IMPERSONATIONS will be the contribution of Charlie Chaplin to the "Dodge Film Stars Radio Hour."

STYLES from the motion picture world is the topic selected by Norma Talmadge for her bit in the program from movie capital Thursday through KDKA and WCAE.

TOASTMASTER—Douglas Fairbanks will preside and speak on health from his home "on the lot."

TO SING—A Spanish song will be the vehicle by which Dolores Del Rio will entertain the invisible audience Thursday night.

WILL RECITE—John Barrymore will render Hamlet's "Soliloquy" as his share of the entertainment.

Names of Famous Crowding Programs

Scintillating stars of the stage and motion picture firmaments this week will invade etheral realms. Direct from headlining in the theater and on the lot, a score of leading actors and actresses will be heard in two programs, the first Actors' Fund Benefit to be broadcast, Sunday night, and the Dodge Brothers presentation from Hollywood, Thursday night.

Sophie Tucker, Mitzi, Otis Skinner, Constance Collier, Eva Le Gallienne, Moran and Mack, Paul Whiteman, Dennis King, Marilyn Miller, Fritzi Scheff, Will Mahoney, Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske, Ina Claire, Mina Gombel and Taylor Holmes are among those who will face the microphone Sunday night at 9:15 o'clock, in the first of Actors' Fund benefits to be placed on the air by the National Broadcasting Company Blue Network, including KDKA.

Thursday night at 9 o'clock, Dodge Brothers will utilize more than two score radio stations throughout the nation, including KDKA and WCAE, when they bring before the invisible audience Norma Talmadge, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, D. W. Griffith, John Barrymore and Dolores Del Rio. The program will come direct from the bungalow of Douglas Fairbanks "on the lot" at Hollywood. Mr. Fairbanks will officiate as toastmaster. Paul Whiteman and his band, from New York, also will be heard in this program. The Maxwell Hour, a regular Thursday feature, will remain off the air that night to permit the Dodge program to be carried to the greatest possible number of listeners.

Aside from the actors' benefit, the regular chain programs will dominate the offerings of the Pittsburgh stations Sunday. Social Advice from Aunty Climax

By the Brilliant Satirist—Fish

Dear Aunty Climax:

FOLKS tell me I am very pretty, but I am awful cross-eyed. Tell me what I can do to hide it.

EYELEEN O——.
Youngstown, Pa.

Dear Eyeleen:

I have consulted our Beauty Specialist. She has made two sketches of modes you can use. The second she considers most effectual.

Dear Aunty Climax:

I GOT into a terrible jam the other night. I saw a splendid girl, one of the models at a fashion show held near Columbus Circle, New York. I managed to meet my divinity and asked her if I could taxi her home. When we got into the taxi I found she lived in Yonkers. I had $6.40. What should I have done? GEORGE JAY.
New York.

Step quietly out the door while she puts on her war paint.

Dear Aunty Climax:

I AM a stenographer, making $23 a week, and live in a private boarding house, where we are not allowed to entertain men in our rooms. Where can my fiance and I spend our evenings? He makes $26.50, and has a mother and aunt and four sisters to support, and really can't afford a car for us to park in.

DISTRESSFUL.
Atlanta, Ga.

Have you never tried sitting out on your fire escape? This is technically allowed in some of the best boarding houses. It also enables you to make adequate use of the moon.

Dear Aunty Climax:

MY wife is always trying to get me to go to night clubs, but they bore me, and anyway I am much too busy. Can you suggest any basis of compromise?

Montauk, L. I. GEORGE L. B——.

Hire a good-looking secretary and take her along with you. Then you can dictate to her while your wife dances, and she will keep you from getting bored. This may help to cure your wife of asking you.

Dear Aunty Climax:

I AM a widow of 29 and still quite attractive, I think. One of my nephew's friends, a charming boy of 17, persists in attempting to make love to me. Can you help me out of my difficulty?

GENEVIEVE L. S——.
Great Falls, Utah.

My Dear Genevieve:

I don't think you honestly need help!

Bitter Feud of the Two Young Sisters That Has Already Cost Three Lives

THIS is the modern year 1928, when people no longer engage in the picturesque feuds of the mountains, but in the hill country around Paul's Valley, in Oklahoma, they don't know that. It is the section of a thousand feuds. The oldsters who, somehow, have miraculously survived the numberless warfares between families, remember well, and relate with avidity, the details of some of the more notable of the feuds. But none is more interesting than the present-day feud between two women, sisters, which has already cost three lives, which has divided the Martins and the Carltons into armed camps, and which threatens to continue until both families are wiped out or until one or the other weakens and leaves the section for milder parts.

On each side of the deadline which separates the embattled groups stands a woman. One is a comely young widow, wealthy in her own right as a quarter-blood Chickasaw Indian heiress, who holds in her arms the infant born after the father had been shot down. She is Mrs. Dora Carlton. On the other side is Lillie Martin, her seventeen-year-old sister, who drove the motor car from which her father fired the shots that killed his son-in-law.

The feud dates back a dozen years, when the sisters were young, the older just entering her teens and the other not yet of school age. It was then that Henry Martin, their father, employed George Carlton as a farm hand.

Dora, the older of the sisters, was to come into an estate valued at approximately a half million dollars. Already there were many suitors, but the father sternly denied any permission to call at the Martin home. He was determined that no young Oklahoman should marry the daughter and take away from the Martin family the wealth that the girl was to inherit.

The father was satisfied that he was shooing away all would-be sweethearts. Lillie, the younger sister, knew that Dora was in love with George, and she told her father. There sprang up a gradually increasing bitter feeling between the sisters. There were many scenes between them.

"I'll look at George Carlton and talk to him when I please," Dora told the younger girl.

"And papa'll take a long whip to you, too," threatened Lillie.

Torn between a desire to retain young Carlton as a farm hand and an eagerness to drive him away from chances of winning the love of his heiress daughter, Henry Martin was undecided what step to take. Carlton was the best worker in that part of the country. The father never saw the youth and girl actually making love.

But the little sister whispered significant things to the father, and affairs had reached a crisis when the war came and George Carlton marched away as a volunteer.

Two years went by. Apparently the sisters had forgotten their animosity. The younger girl was growing fast, would be making eyes at the youth of that part of the country. Beaux for the older girl, however, still were forbidden. The father could not forget that her marriage would take away from him control of the fortune that was to be hers.

Lillie Martin, the Younger Sister, Who Drove the Car From Which Her Brother-in-Law Was Murdered.

The County Courthouse at Paul's Valley, Oklahoma, Where Mr. Martin Was Tried for Murder, and Released on Bail, Only to Be Killed by Friends of His Son-in-Law.

None of the boys who remained at home attracted Dora in the least. Her thoughts were with young Carlton, somewhere in France. The war ended and young Carlton came home.

Warned by the younger daughter, Henry Martin increased the vigilance of his guarding of the older daughter. Soon bad blood was arising again. George Carlton came around the Martin place. The father did not know it, and neither did the younger sister, but he visited Dora in secret, and one night she bundled up a few garments, threw them out of a second story window, slipped quietly down the stair way and was off in an elopement with the khaki-clad farm-hand.

Dora Martin next morning, in a far away county seat, became the bride of George Carlton. They set up housekeeping on a farm on which the youth was able to make first payment out of his savings. Credit was his for the asking, for soon his wife was to become wealthy.

Steadily the couple forged ahead, adding slowly to their herds, planting and reaping, and making payments on their farm. No appeal was made to the angry father of the bride to help her obtain any of the funds she soon was to inherit when she became of legal age. For a while everything seemed to run smoothly.

Then, one day just after Carlton's barn had been filled with new-mown hay, it burned mysteriously. There was little insurance and his loss was heavy.

There were rumors that not only Henry Martin, father-in-law, was expressing enmity toward young Carlton, but word went through the Oklahoma hills that J. E. Martin, grandfather of the young bride, also was making threats against him. The youth openly accused his wife's relatives.

Mrs. Dora Martin Carlton, Widowed by the Feud Which Began When She Married and Took the Control of Half a Million, Which She Inherited, Out of the Family.

On the streets of Paul's Valley, the county seat, young Carlton met J. E. Martin, grandfather-in-law. There were accusations and counter-accusations. They were seen to shake their fists at each other and suddenly both were seen to reach toward pockets. The youth was quicker.

The older man fell with a bullet through his heart. The first blood of the sisters' feud had been spilled. The grandfather of the two girls was buried, with the sisters attending, but not meeting at the funeral.

The slayer was arrested, but released on bond of $25,000. The feud had brought bloodshed, and residents of the hills waited for the next move. In it Lillie, younger sister, played a part. At the wheel of a motor car she drove down the main street of Paul's Valley, with her father beside her. In his hands was a shotgun.

The car seemed to slow down slightly as the father and daughter spied Carlton, slayer of their father and grandfather, walking along with his head down. The young farmer was caught unawares. Henry Martin fired two shots, the first striking the young man in the back and piercing his spinal cord. He fell dead.

The score was even—one dead for Dora's side and one dead for Lillie's. Henry Martin and Lillie were arrested on murder charges. The father stood trial and was sentenced to serve twenty-five years in the Oklahoma penitentiary. Lillie's trial was delayed and she was released on bond. The father also obtained temporary freedom on bond pending appeal and defiantly walked the streets of Paul's Valley. But not for long.

On the side of Dora and George Carlton were arrayed Buster Cape and W. H. Finley, lifelong friends. On November 1, 1927, as they rounded a corner in the Oklahoma county seat, they came face to face with Henry Martin.

They say Martin reached for a gun. But they reached first, and both fired, almost simultaneously, and the third feud victim fell dead.

All efforts to reconcile the sisters have been fruitless. The feud goes on. New partisans are springing up for both sides. Dora has promised her posthumous infant to avenge the death of his father. Lillie, with the shadow of a jail sentence over her, has friends to carry on the feud if she cannot do it herself.

Earns His Living By Killing Coyotes From His Airplane

ON the prairies and mountains of the northern half of the continent of America is an animal against which, without cause, the settlers have always conducted a warfare. This is the coyote, like the hyena a scavenger, and one of the few living creatures for which not even the most friendly naturalist can say a good word.

The coyote is content to eat almost anything it can find—birds, buck-rabbits, insects of all kinds, as well as small rodents like prairie-dogs and mice. Its melancholy howls make night hideous on the prairies, and it is the relentless foe of all young creatures, such as the fawns of antelope and deer.

The coyote assembles in packs, like jackals, and whereas moose and bison have become almost extinct, as the result of hunting, it has been impossible for man to hunt the coyote out of the threadbare existence he seems to content himself with. A live coyote is worth considerably less than nothing. In many States, a dead coyote is worth money. In South Dakota, for instance, there is a bounty of ten dollars paid by stockmen for each dead coyote, and in addition the thick hide of the coyote fetches about twenty dollars. Thus a coyote, dead, is worth thirty dollars.

Clyde Ice, of Rapid City, South Dakota, decided that it would be worth his while to specialize in hunting coyotes. If he could bag three a week, it would be an admirable income. He found, however, that it was not easy to kill a coyote. They were night-raiders for the most part. In the old covered wagon days, they would follow the caravans and haunt the line to get the refuse thrown out. Of late years they have come down to the great trans-continental railways, and followed the tracks for food. Three meals a day take place regularly on these trains, and the menu is not stinted. The cooks throw all the waste portions—beef bones, other bones, stale bread and trimmings—overboard.

Clyde Ice knew of this habit. But the coyotes are so fearful of enemies, and particularly the animal man, that it is extremely difficult to get near them. Clyde Ice became a pioneer in a new form of coyote hunting. He bought an airplane, and taking along with him a sharpshooting hunter friend, Earl Wilson of Belle Fourche, he would take daily trips over the prairies, following, like the coyotes, the line of the railroad.

In six weeks the twain bagged a total of seventy-seven coyotes. At thirty dollars per coyote, this was a total of $2,210, an average of almost $368 per week. The catch has almost paid for the plane, and there are still thousands of coyotes left. The despised coyote, suddenly elevated to the role of a valuable prize for hunters, may now be wiped off the face of the American prairies.

Found the Old Master in the Rubbish Heap, and Bought It for a Song

MR. ERNEST V. PARRISH, of Elizabeth, N. J., knows rather more than the average man about paintings and antiques. His delight is to browse around in old shops, and recently, while so occupied in a shop of that sort near his home town, he saw a painting buried beneath a pile of rubbish.

The dust accumulation of generations had obscured many of the details of the picture, and age and neglect had cracked much of the canvas. But it could be clearly discerned that the artist had drawn a picture of the Crucifixion of Christ. Finding it extremely difficult to maintain a calm exterior while he examined the painting, Mr. Parrish, with beating heart, realized that the painting was the work of the celebrated Italian painter, Antonio Allegri, better known as Correggio (1494-1534), whose masterpiece was the famous fresco of "The Ascension of Christ," on the cupola of the Benedictine Church of San Giovanni, in Parma.

Parrish, realizing that to discuss price with the dealer on the basis of intrinsic value was hopeless—a genuine Correggio being practically priceless—made no effort to buy the canvas at the time. It had reposed beneath the pile of rubbish for many years, ever since the shop had been opened, and would probably not be purchased overnight, unless the secret leaked out. Casually he bought a piece of bric-a-brac and left the shop. A day or two later he came back and purchased one or two more objects of art of trifling value.

Then the day came when he casually inquired the price of the painting, and was told a figure that was grotesquely low. He immediately made the purchase. For a few dollars he bought a painting which, if he were disposed to sell now, he could easily get as many thousands.

Painting of the Crucifixion, Declared to Be a Correggio, Which Mr. E. V. Parris, of Elizabeth, N. J., Rescued From the Rubbish Heap.

"Torture Chair" Keeps Chorus Girls Slender

THE scene is backstage of a New York theatre, with several chorus girls sharing a dressing room. Three of the coryphees look sadly at the fourth, whose expression is one of melancholy.

"I guess there's no way out of it," she remarks sadly. "It's the chair for me." The other three wag their heads in sympathetic unison.

"I never thought," observes one, "when you joined the show, that you'd end up in the chair."

All of which is not quite as bad as it sounds. It is an electric chair, which awaits the fourth of the choristers; not because she has committed murder, but because she has committed obesity. The chair is not at Sing Sing, but in the slenderizing institute of a former prizefighter, in the heart of the Broadway section. The electric chair in the gymnasium is a new invention. It kills—plumpness.

Chorus girls, as a rule, do not like to diet. For a while there was an epidemic of pill taking for reduction purposes. When two or three well known movie stars died, and a large number of others suffered severe maladies as a result of the pill-taking road to slenderness, it was generally recognized that this was not the way to do it. There has sprung up, as a result, a series of treatments, rather more heroic than mere dieting, but in accord with accepted rules of health and hygiene, for the training down of chorus girls who are beginning to curve more than the current styles call for. One of the most rigorous of these is facetiously called "the torture chair." It is really a mechanical massage roller, operating on the hips while the subject remains seated.

Chorus Girls Undergoing the "Torture Chair" Treatment for Slenderizing Their Hips.

Falls in Love With a Cowboy

Miss Barbara Monell, $15,000,000 Heiress, Tired of Teas, Dances, Theatre Parties and College Boys in Derby Hats and Coonskin Coats, Marries a Colorado Cowpuncher in Sombrero and Flannel Shirt

Young Kenneth Glaze in His Flannel Shirt, Cowboy Hat and High Boots Was the Living Ideal of the Chivalrous Man of the Great Open Places—Over Six Feet Tall, Strong of Muscle, Pistol in Holster, and "Quick on the Draw," This Was the Man She Could Love.

Mrs. Ambrose Monell, Widow of the Late Multi-Millionaire President of the International Nickel Co. and Mother of Barbara.

Miss Barbara Monell and Her Favorite Saddle Horse, "Attaboy."

Kenneth Glaze's Harness Shop in Colorado Springs, With Kenneth Standing in the Doorway.

Barbara Monell Was Tired of the Endless Round of Social Affairs in New York. The Sons of the Rich and Socially Prominent, the Young College Boys in Coonskin Coats and Derby Hats All Looked Alike, Talked Alike and Bored Her Beyond Endurance.

NOW we can believe any of the cowboy romances we see in the movies because the improbable part of them has just happened in real life.

Out in Colorado where he-men in "chaps" and hats with brims like bungalow roofs are still to be found, one of them, a typical cow-puncher who wandered into Colorado Springs with a herd of cattle, won and married a fifteen-million-dollar heiress fresh from the "effete" East.

He has not only married, but conver'ed her from teas, dances, night clubs, loungelizards and the society boys of her kind with their coonskin coat, derby hat, stick and "snooty" roadster, to the simple life of a cow-puncher's wife, in the great wide-open spaces we read about.

In pictures the wild western gentleman who lopes in from the plains and carries the millionaire's daughter off her feet (sometimes literally by reaching down from his saddle) are tall, rangy and handsome. Kenneth Wilson Glaze, who has just played that part in real life, is such a specimen. He is 27 years old, over six feet tall, weighs 175 pounds and somewhat resembles Mr. Gene Tunney, the handsome and cultured heavyweight champion. Also he wears a sombrero, woolen shirt, "never has climbed into a dress suit and never aims to."

In the movies, the cowboy hero usually attracts the girl's attention not only by the originality of his grammar, but by saving her from some designing villain. Mr. Glaze has not yet done exactly that, but he has saved her from "perishing of boredom and lonesomeness," so she says. And with all that wealth and beauty around, some sort of he-villain ought to turn up soon and give the hero a chance to use fist, gun, lariat, pony and all the other well-known screen cowboy thrills.

It was love at first sight, so sudden and explosive that neither of them remembers who proposed. To make such a happening convincing on the screen would require a lot of "footage" explaining how the two got that way. To account for the susceptible condition of the girl, Miss Barbara Monell, they would need to show the endless attention she received even when, as a 14-year-old, she amazed Newport society by swimming two miles through the surf. As the daughter of Ambrose Monell, president of the International Nickel Co., she had everything and did everything that a multi-millionaire's daughter might reasonably or even unreasonably expect.

By the time her twenty-third birthday approached she had been in the social swim so long, been courted by so many sons of the very rich and socially prominent, that she had decided that they all looked alike, talked alike and thought alike. Perhaps she had better marry one of them to get rid of the others. But then that would mean dinners and dances with a lot of married bores instead of single ones, so she didn't bother. It is very sad, at the age of almost twenty-three, to have nothing to look forward to but ennui.

Just then came a diversion. She was taken sick, which was a novelty and had an operation which was, at least, exciting. But then came slow convalescence and she was more bored than ever. The doctor prescribed the climate of Colorado Springs, but there was more in the town than the prescription called for. She rented the Allen House, one of the mansions of Broadmoor, fashionable suburb of Colorado Springs. There she surrounded herself with a retinue of servants, a nurse, a liveried chauffeur to drive her imported car and found she had less to do than ever. The one hobby of her life that she still really enjoyed, horseback riding, was forbidden by the doctors.

And so she moped in seclusion and wondered if she would die of lonesomeness and boredom. By the doctor's order she took a daily drive and a daily hike accompanied by her husky pup, "Chinook." Then came a rabies scare and the City Board of Health, guiltless of any romantic motives, ordered that all dogs appearing on the street must be muzzled and on a leash. The direct and almost immediate result of this mandate was that Chinook got a muzzle and his mistress a husband.

Meanwhile the hero was equally disgusted with life. Two months before, he had ridden into town with a small herd of cattle, sold them and with the proceeds started a little one-room harness and leather business. The business was doing pretty well, but Glaze was wretched. He had voluntarily given up the rancher's life that he now knew was the only one suited to him, put his savings into that herd and now they were tied up in that little shop.

Colorado Springs is a spread-out little city with very wide streets and Pike's Peak looming overhead, but to the rancher it seemed like a crowded prison. He could not escape very well because, as usual, it was easier to start a business than to sell it. He had about made up his mind to throw it away, ride out and start all over again as a ranch hand, when that dog-muzzle ordinance was promulgated and something happened.

He had just measured the asthmatic countenance of an aged bull dog and arose to get a piece of leather to make a muzzle for it. With the lithe grace of a young athlete of the outdoors, he reached up eight feet and lifted down a hide from its peg on the wall. As he did so he was conscious that someone was darkening his doorway. He turned, took a long look and exclaimed:

"For the love of Mike!"

In that door stood positively and absolutely the prettiest girl that ever lived (his opinion), and dressed as no girl he ever met had dressed, and she was looking at him the way the lovely daughter of the wicked millionaire in the movies looks at the poor, but honest cowboy—as if she were going to fall in love with him. She saw before her a romantic, handsome and very much he-man figure, right out of a moving picture—a cowboy and his face looked vaguely like someone she knew she had admired. Adding to the favorable impression, her nostrils were fascinated by the scent of new leather, a delightful odor to anyone who loves horses and their harness as she does.

It is not hard to understand the effect of cowboy pictures upon a girl from the East to whom these characters were as unreal as a knight in armor. But it should be remembered that the cowboys also see their pictures. They take a professional and critical interest in the riding and the handling of the riata, etc., but they take a deeper one in the lovely girl the cowboy gets as a reward for his skill and courage.

There they were, two lonesome, bored souls, each suddenly confronted with a close-up of what seemed to them a character from the screen. They smiled frank admiration at each other. She came in and spent the rest of the afternoon in that shop and they can't remember any details except that both took it for granted they were in love. When she started home they were engaged.

About that time Miss Monell remembered what she had come in for and "Chinook" had his features measured for something that he was not going to enjoy. Mr. Glaze sat up most of the night making that muzzle and spoiled his best hide which he had been cherishing for an expensive saddle. But out where men are men they don't put business before love.

Miss Monell put the good news into a telegram to her mother in New York. She had a feeling that somehow it would not seem like such good news when it came off the other end of the wire, because Mrs. Monell could not see Kenneth. If it had been President Coolidge's son or Count de Glaze she could have gotten it into ten words and Mother would have understood. But even a night letter was not long enough to make a mother see why a $15,000,000 heiress should marry a cowboy. Barbara had a premonition that she was going to be asked a lot of questions.

She was right. Mother asked them; so did uncle and a lot of other relatives. It is not good form to congratulate a girl on either marriages or engagements and certainly nobody made that mistake this time. The replies expressed alarm and disbelief. Mother after urging her daughter to think it over a long time ended by saying that a letter was following. In a few minutes came a second wire with more admonitions and ending with the statement that she herself was following.

Mother arrived and met her future son-in-law, admitted for the sake of argument that he was as handsome and charming as Barbara had advertised him but was he of her set and kind?

"No," said daughter, "he is not and that is one of the main reasons he appeals to me. If I ever find out that he is a society man disguised I'll have the marriage annulled."

There was an argument over that.

Mrs. Monell looked into Mr. Glaze's past and found that he had lived a life of blameless rectitude. Furthermore he has ridden bucking broncbos and relay races in rodeos from Pendleton to far into the Southwest, and that is more than Norman blood according to many people's way of thinking. There was nothing anyone could say against the young man and yet the lights burned late many a night in the Allen residence while the ladies talked. But Barbara had her way.

One month after their first meeting, the marriage vows were taken the other day before Rev. Dr. Chauncey Blodgett, rector of the fashionable Grace and St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, at his home in Colorado Springs. Among the witnesses were the mother, uncle Ralph Monell and the bride's sister, Mrs. Margaret O'Donnell of New York.

Mrs. Monell, when she saw that the girl was determined, made a graceful surrender and handed out to the waiting newspaper men the most cheerful analysis of the situation she could think of. She said:

"Mr. Glaze is a young man of fine character, as fine a young man as my daughter might wish for. And character counts much more than social position. The wedding plans had my consent from the beginning, though I did ask them to wait a while."

Just how whole-hearted this welcome to the cowboy son-in-law may be was not shown by any accompanying statement that daughter Barbara had been handed any considerable slice of the Nickel King's fifteen millions, as a mark of approval. On the contrary, the heiress bride, who has not yet come into her fortune, packed up and moved out of the rented Allen mansion and all its servants and moved into the most modest living quarters she has ever inhabited.

And as soon as the snows melt on the prairies, Mr. and Mrs. Glaze are going to take a small ranch, where the bride will do all her own cooking, wash the pots and pans and keep the ranch house clean with her own fair hands. That is no picnic. She is going in for hard domestic work such as even the wives of most laboring men in the cities are managing to escape little by little. Barbara is the product of six of the most expensive finishing schools in the East, but did they teach her anything of use in that ranch kitchen?

Experience shows that the marriages that last are usually those between people of the same class, habits, and traditions. Radical differences that seem picturesque or cute in the first flush of love usually become irritating peculiarities.

The movies never tell what the heiress who married the cowboy thinks about him two years later or what he thinks about her. What happens when one of those boys with a coonskin coat and a gum-drop derby drives up to the ranch in a snooty roadster?

It is not impossible for a woman to become tired of a very he-man. Otherwise why did Delilah bob Samson's hair on him?

Broadway Too Wicked, So the Chorus Girl Went West, Where They Wear More Clothes

A NEW YORK chorus girl, not long ago, won fame of a sort when, ordered to wear a scant costume, she refused, and resigned rather than abide by the order of the management. It was believed that her sacrifice would result in a reform, and apparently it did. But the reform wasn't drastic enough for pretty Marie Leder, who once graced the chorus of a Broadway revue and several night club shows.

Having learned about night clubs, Marie decided to start one, and for that purpose she established herself in Chicago. She decided against New York because she insisted that chorus girls there were still required to wear too few clothes.

Now Marie can wear a minimum of attire with an effect much admired by masculine beholders; there cannot be a sour grapes angle to her point of view. But she objects to having her anatomy considered of more importance than her talents. And, she says, so do the other new York chorus girls, who, she claims, are leaving New York for that reason in ever increasing numbers.

"Chicago is becoming America's beauty Mecca," Miss Leder announced on her arrival. "Miss Sweet Sixteen, aspiring to footlight fame, is passing up New York to go to Chicago for her training and career.

"Why? Well, Manhattan is no longer American in its point of view. It's too Parisian. It believes clothes makes the man, but not the woman. It denies any intellectual right to the theatrically ambitious Miss Sweet Sixteen. It simply regards has as a study in anatomy.

"Chicago has fewer bald-headed men than New York, recognizes ability, brains and beauty, and doesn't bother a girl about her telephone number. She can wear as many clothes as she wishes.

"Night club life is just one test after another to determine how little a girl can wear. The girl who is so physically perfect as to appear to advantage in one string of beads is a headliner; the one that needs two strings of beads to cover up a defect or so is a second-rater, and one that requires three strings is hopelessly out of the running when it comes to landing good jobs.

"Seeking work is just one disrobing act after another. The booking agents won't hire a girl until they have optical evidence that she is physically perfect. Not that the agents are immoral. Far from it—it's simply business with them, but embarrassing to the girls."

This Costume Worn by Miss Leder Comprises a Lot More Than She Was Asked to Wear in New York.

Miss Marie Leder, Chorus Girl and Night Club Entertainer, Who Has Deserted New York's Broadway Because It Is Too Wicked.

While she didn't put herself in the "one string of beads" class, Miss Leder might have done so, for she is the possessor of a string of prizes won in beauty contests. Not only is she very pretty, but she has a delectable figure, and the purest white skin. But she also has brains and modesty.

She is a protege of the unfortunate Kay Laurel, once queen of the chorus girls, who, just a few months ago, met an untimely death through the headlong life she had followed.

Kay Laurel had no delusions about the life she was leading, and frankly warned Marie to shun liquor and late hours. For this reason Marie does not drink, avoids late parties and leads as regular a life as a girl can who has taken up entertaining as a life work.

When Miss Leder Took Part in a Beauty Contest She Thought This Bathing Suit Was Daring.

Last Fall when the artists of Greenwich Village, New York, staged a beauty contest of their own for chorus girls, models and night club entertainers, Miss Leder was induced to compete. She appeared in a tight-fitting bathing suit which she considered very daring.

But she was greatly surprised to find that the other contestants were robed in nothing more than Spanish shawls. These shawls seemed difficult to handle and were continually slipping here and there. Marie thought she would have no chance with all the pulchritude revealed by the shawls, and greatly to her astonishment was awarded first prize. Afterward she learned that while her beauty might have alone won her the honor, the judges were greatly influenced by her modesty in appearing in a bathing suit that couldn't slip.

"I'm sure an exhibition like that Greenwich Village affair would not be countenanced by Chicago men," she said in discussing the incident. "I have studied and analyzed Chicago men during my inspection of the night club field, and I find them very superior to the type of men that haunt the New York clubs.

"Chicago men are not in the least provincial, but they look for a girl to show some talent and art in her entertaining, not just areas of bare flesh. They have real appreciation of art."

Miss Leder is not alone in her opinion concerning nudity in the New York shows. During the past season several of the more important entrepreneurs came to a similar decision, with the result that, for the first time in several seasons, choruses appeared in which the costumes were more than mere girdles. Several of the shows were conspicuous for the lack of any undraped chorus numbers.

This, unfortunaely, did not apply to the night club shows. Nudity on the stage, while objectionable from some points of view, is at least toned down by lights and the curtain line. In night clubs the girls employed in the so-called "floor shows" are forced to mingle with the patrons, many of whom have been drinking, and there have been incidents resulting from this fraternization of performers and patrons which have caused many night club girls to take action similar to that of Miss Leder.

Ferocious Beasts Her Gentle Pets

THE wilder they are, the better she likes them. Maria La Corse, Europe's best known woman animal trainer, places her head inside the gaping maw of a forest-bred lion at each performance of the circus which employs her. One snap of the great jaw would terminate her interesting career, but that snap has never yet taken place. The reason for this, Mlle. La Corse points out, is that the ferocious beasts are her pets, and pets love their masters and will not hurt them.

"Lions are among the easiest of the wild animals to train," says Mlle. La Corse. "The lion really takes more pleasure in doing tricks than any other animal, with the possible exception of the dog. The grimace and roars that frighten people are not rage at all, but pleasure. I am quite proud of my stunt of putting my head into the mouth of one of my lions, but I assure you the lion is just as proud of the tricks as I am. Lions are extremely intelligent animals, and if they have one outstanding fault it is laziness. In that they are practically incorrigible.

"Tigers, too, are intelligent and affectionate. In fact, they are intensely affectionate, and perfectly safe to handle as long as their sensitive nerves are not disturbed. A jungle tiger can be made into a pet as easily as the ordinary cat if his tendency towards nervousness is taken into consideration.

"I am told that scientists have placed the chimpanzee, the orang-outang and the gorilla as nearest to man in the scale of general intelligence. My experience has taught me differently. When it comes to general all around intelligence, I believe the elephant—particularly the Indian elephant—ranks next to man. The trouble with the monkeys is that while they are bright and adaptable enough, they apparently have little or no power of concentration or persistence.

"They skip from one thing to another. Their tricks are entirely imitative, with little if any reasoning behind them. The elephant, on the other hand, has great powers of concentration, patience and determination. What he learns he retains and adds to by his own will and reasoning power."

Russia To Hypnotize Its Drunkards

DRUNKENNESS is one of the national problems of Russia, and apparently the Soviet Government is not ready yet to try the same remedy as the United States, that is, prohibition. A startling alternative has been attempted. Experiments have been conducted by one of the best known psychiatrists in Russia, Prof. Bechteriev, in mass hypnotism for the cure of alcoholism.

Prof. Bechteriev assembles alcoholics in groups and first gives them a brief lecture on the evils of drink. Then he hypnotizes the entire group. It is an interesting fact that this is easier than the hypnotism of an individual. A group, says Prof. Bechteriev, has less mind resistance than an individual. This explains the ease with which mobs may be swayed.

When the patients are sufficiently under hypnotic influence for a raised hand or foot to remain suspended in the air, Bechteriev tells them that the total avoidance of liquor is a cure for drunkenness. When the patients awake, the psychiatrist gives them autosuggestive phrases to be repeated by them several times daily for a month.

It is said that at the end of a month, apparently complete cures are exhibited by persons who had seemed heretofore to be incorrigible drunkards.

While this treatment is unique, it is by no means the first time that hypnotism has been made use of for healing purposes. Several recent striking instances of the use of hypnotism instead of anaesthetics has focussed the attention of physicians and surgeons on the possibility that eventually hypnotism may take the place of drugs for some surgical operations.

The use of hypnosis along medical lines came up and became the subject of fierce controversy in the latter part of the 18th century when F. A. Mesmer, of Vienna, a physician, came forth with the claim that by means of what he called animal magnetism, he could cure many diseases. Gradually medical science in Europe came to recognize the physiological value of hypnotism, and its use today along those lines is not uncommon.

Hunting and Killing Deadly Rattlesnakes the Job of Champion Dog

KING FIGARO is the name of a champion shepherd dog, owned by C. H. Godshall, a California fancier. Figaro is the most important dog on the Ihmsen Ranch Kennels of Victoriaville, California. He has participated in dozens of dog shows and has won numerous cups and blue ribbons. Were he so inclined, Figaro could very easily retire on his laurels, and submit for the rest of his life to nothing more strenuous than admiration and petting.

But Figaro has a mission in life. He's a hunting dog. Through his own volition he has selected as his prey one of the most deadly creatures of the section in which he lives—the rattlesnake. The champion shepherd dog does not hunt the rattlers for purposes of food. With Figaro it is simply a matter of sportsmanship. He does not like rattlers. He considers them his enemies, because he knows they are the enemies of his friends—men—and he goes after them remorselessly and with remarkable success. Those who know Figaro say that he has accounted for more rattlesnakes in the State of California than any human or other animal.

The confidence and ability of Figaro in hunting rattlesnakes cannot be traced to any mistaken notions on his part that the venomous serpents are unworthy opponents. Figaro knows just how deadly the rattlers are. This is evident in the great care with which he stalks them, and in the manner in which he makes his kill. Many times Mr. Godshall, Figaro's owner, has accompanied his dog on snake-hunting expeditions, and recently he took along with him a camera, and was able to photograph successive details of Figaro's battle with a rattlesnake, a battle which ended, as these encounters always have ended, with Figaro barking his cry of triumph and the rattlesnake dead.

The photographs are printed on this page, and are most interesting in that they show the various stages of the hunt. Figaro's actions are always the same in a snake hunt.

Slowly the dog, after he has found the snake, will circle the serpent as the latter, coiled and ready to strike, begins also turning as it watches the dog. There is, in the maneuvers of both creatures, a mutual respect. Invariably it is Figaro who sees the first opening. This is probably due to the fact that snake hunting with him is an old story, whereas the average rattler is not accustomed to facing a dog as foe.

As soon as Figaro sees his opening he makes a dash. There is a quick shake of the dog's head, and it is all over in a second. In that second the dog has severed the head of the snake from its body and has thrown the wriggling serpent to the ground.

How Our Eye Troubles Come From Our Fish Ancestors

How the Fish Ancestors of Man Came Out of the Water, Learned to Move About on the Land, Adapted Their Near-Sighted Eyes to Long-Distance Vision, and Slowly Moved Their Position to the Front of the Skull.

1—Millions of Years Ago, Before the Dawn of Man, the Highest Form of Life on This Earth Was the Backboned Fish of the Sea.

2—Some of These Fish Were Washed Up or Managed to Crawl Out Onto the Shore, and Learned to Breathe in the Open Air.

3—Gradually These Land-Fish Became Skilled in Flopping About on Their Fins, and Developed Them Into Feet—and Became Reptiles.

4—As Skill With Their Feet Increased, Some of These Reptiles (Small Dinosaurs) Learned to Run on Their Hind Legs.

5—Some Species Sought Their Food in the Trees. In the Tarsier Nature Had Started the Movement of the Eyes From the Fish Position Towards the Front of the Head.

6—The Eyes Finally Reached the Front of the Head in the Ape, the Animal Whose Vision Is Nearest to Man's.

7—After Millions of Years of Development the Eyes Have Finally Completed the Movement From the Side of the Head Around to the Front of the Head, as in Man.

They Got Along Like the Other Animals, With Fish-Eyes in the Sides of Their Heads, Until the Big Carnivora Drove Them Up the Trees. Then They Needed Eyes in Front to Look Where They Leaped

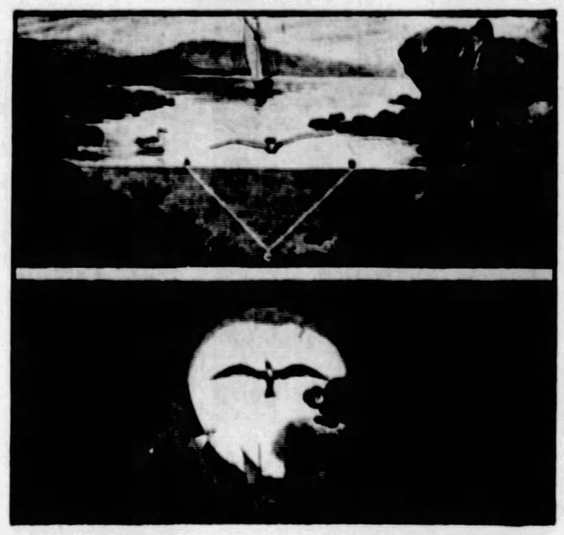
The Shark, Regarded by Science as Man's Ancestor Among the Fishes, Showing Eyes on the Side of the Head Which Have Painfully Traveled Around to the Front of the Skull Through Countless Millions of Years of Evolution.



Professor Ward's Cross Section of a Pond, Showing How Various Objects Would Appear to a Fish Whose Eye Was at the Point "C."

SCIENCE has found that we get our eye troubles from our fish ancestors.

The fish's eye was well adapted to such short-range vision as is possible in water. When some of the fish, with an adventurous, pioneer disposition, became amphibians, crawling up the banks to feed and flopping back again, it was still good enough for them.

Later, when some of these pioneers evolved into reptiles, swift-moving mammals and birds, the eye had to be improved for long-distance vision. The frog doesn't see you coming until you are almost on top of him. He doesn't need to—one hop and he is under water, but the crow and the fox begin sizing you up a mile away.

Still this improvement involved no great mechanical problem until the big carnivorous animals became so fierce and persistent that they chased some of the medium-sized mammals into the trees and made them stay there. Among those uncomfortable wretches was the common ancestor of man and the apes.

As Dr. Eugene G. Wiseman, of Buffalo, N. Y., points out in his forthcoming book on the evolution of the human eye, it is bad enough for a man to have to perch on a limb, an hour or two, treed by a bull or a dog—but suppose he had to try to spend his life up there. Except for his being too heavy, man is better adapted for tree-living than were those first creatures who scrambled up to escape being eaten.

Their great difficulty was their eyes. They must have been fairly light, nimble creatures, able to leap from one tree to the next, but they had to make nice judgments of distance as monkeys and apes do today. They weren't allowed but one guess. If they guessed wrong, they fell, broke their necks or were accepted as a gift of Providence by some sabre-toothed tiger. Our arboreal ancestors were born "with two strikes on them." One miss and they were out.

Their eyes were undoubtedly good enough to see further than they could jump—most any eye could do that. But their eyes were placed in the fish position, on the sides of their heads. This meant that in order to look before they leaped, they had to turn the head sidewise, as a rooster does when he looks at you. This was bad enough, but they could not possibly centre both eyes on that branch that it was so important to reach. This was so bad that it was almost fatal. Otherwise Nature would not have wrenched both eyes around to the front of the head, as it has in man and the apes, a piece of necessary cruelty from which we are still suffering and the cause of our wearing eyeglasses.

According to Dr. Wiseman, our eyes have not yet quite reached the end of their painful journey. The eyesockets do not point straight ahead, but diverge slightly to each side. In sleep, intoxication (when we see double), and in death we are cock-eyed or, as it really ought to be called, "fish-eyed." When awake and trying to see straight, this defect has to be corrected by ceaseless muscular effort which not only keeps us under nerve strain, but pulls the eyeball out of shape, makes us near-sighted, causes headaches, indigestion and all sorts of other troubles.

Two second-rate eyes placed in front of his head where he can train them both on the same object are worth more in some ways than the pair of magnificent telescopes that the vulture has in the sides of his. Man and the apes have developed stereoscopic vision which permits them to measure distances as the astronomer does, by triangulation, the base of the triangle being the distance between the two eyes. The brain, by the amount it has to make the eye-muscles turn the eyes in to look at the object, knows those two angles and thereby computes the distance.

The world, to a fish, bird or any other fish-eyed animal, has the flat appearance of an ordinary photograph or moving picture. This is because the ordinary camera has only one eye. The stereoscopic camera has a pair of them, placed apart, like human eyes, and takes two pictures, but you have to look at the pictures through a stereoscope to get the effect of distance.

Some time ago stereoscopic moving pictures were shown in a New York theatre. They were startling. They had so much depth that when an actor in a close-up on the screen pointed his arm at the audience everyone dodged. But they were not practical because each seat had to be furnished with a motor-driven stereoscope. In the same way the cost of furnishing those poor ancestors of ours up in the trees with stereoscopic sight was almost prohibitive in suffering. Nature has not forced that improvement on any creature that could get along without it.

Stereoscopic vision would be worthless to a fish if he had it. In the depths he can only see a few feet ahead at best. Near the surface a trout can spot you some distance away on the bank, but only as a moving object. If you stand still he doesn't know you from a stump. The important thing in a fish's life is to be able to have a full view at all times of both sides, front, rear, top and bottom without trying to turn its almost rigid neck. Danger or food is quite as likely to swim up from behind as to loom up in front. Eyes placed on opposite sides give him an almost 100 per cent. view of the surrounding water.

Most birds do not need stereoscopic sight, but wide-angle vision, like the fish. The vulture soaring in the sky has a telescopic eye in each side of his skull, with which he continually inspects the ground below for dead and dying animals. But all the time he also has to watch other distant, almost invisible specks in the sky, which he knows are brother or sister vultures. The instant one of these vanishes he hurries off in that direction at top speed because it means that the missing bird has found something. His own departure is a signal for the next in line until they collect sometimes from hundreds of miles.

To cover so much ground and sky the vulture needs dispersed vision. He does not need to judge distance nicely. When he lights he can put on the brakes by back-flapping with his wings and he can hover and circle. When the ape leaps he is a projectile and like a bullet must be aimed right or miss.

Small birds that flit among the branches of trees can also alight slowly, but the owls that dash among the branches at night would knock their brains out if they did not have their eyes, like those of man and the apes, in front of their heads or near it. Squirrels, whether of the "flying" or ordinary variety, could no doubt use stereoscopic sight to advantage, but it would have been a luxury and Nature decided the cost was prohibitive. They are such small and light projectiles that they need only to hit a few leaves and small twigs to scramble to safety. However, these aerial rats have to remain lightweights.

The human eye sees fairly well within the range of light waves of the "visible spectrum." It is blind to the shorter ultra-violet rays which the camera uses and are visible to some insects. Other insects, notably the mosquito, see with long infra-red heat rays, which is most important in the mosquito's unpopular business of biting us. Dr. Wiseman states that a human being at night must glow to the eye of a mosquito like a red-hot stove. It sees us by the animal heat we generate.

Bats, like mosquitoes, can fly in what to the human eye is total darkness. Sounds inaudible to man caused by the reflection of the air driven by the bat's wings against solid substances keep them from banging their heads against the sides of a pitch-dark cave.

When anyone starts to make a major change in a machine he usually finds he has let himself in for a lot of other changes and improvements not figured in the first estimate. So it was when Nature started tinkering with the eye. The lowest forms of life, like the amoeba, may be said to have no eye and yet to be sensitive to light all over. A little higher in the scale creatures are seen with small pigment spots which appear to be especially sensitive to light. This is the beginning of an eye. It helps direct the creature in and out of holes but it can't picture anything for it. It is just a bit of film without any camera.

Later came a transparent covering which permitted the sensitive spot to become more sensitive, but still no pictures. As the sensitive area backed away from its window and lined the back of a watery hollow, it became possible for its owner to estimate in a rough way the movement of a bright object by what part it illuminated of this ancestor of the retina.

When the covering grew into a lens, at last pictures were taken and creatures began dimly to see things. Then came a soft focussing lens behind the outer fixed one and an iris to adjust the amount of light to be admitted and also the lid, a protective outside shutter and lens-wiper. Taste and smell were originally much more important to life than sight, which was developed later, but in the higher animals, especially man, it is now the chief teacher of the brain, through which it is estimated we collect 80 per cent of our worldly experience.

For this reason the brain does not hesitate to use nervous energy needed elsewhere to keep our eyes working at highest efficiency and a slight disorder of the visual apparatus can make a nervous wreck of us. Nobody ever got neurasthenia because his sense of smell was a little out of order. Thomas A. Edison is so deaf that he can hardly tell a robin's chirp from a locomotive whistle, but he doesn't care as long as his eyes hold out. The nervous system will accept total blindness philosophically or very bad eyesight but will wreck itself trying to correct a small error of refraction.

Then Nature did a queer thing. She crossed those wires so that the left eye hooked up with the right hemisphere of the brain and vice versa. This opened the way to all sorts of complicated improvements as the eyes started their forward march to the front of the head and both began to get greater glimpses of the same objects. Next Nature started to split the optic nerve and reweave its fibres. She saw no reason why two areas of the brain should be used in recording pictures of the same thing. Therefore the fibres carrying duplicate images were retained on one side of the brain.

As the eyes pushed further forward the overlapping of visual areas increased until in man and the apes it is complete. This gives not only perfect stereoscopic vision but insures a full view ahead, even when one eye is destroyed or either of the optic brain centres injured.

It is believed that the cross-wiring scheme of the optic nerves caused the same method to be adopted all over the body. All the muscles of each side are controlled from the opposite half of the brain.

Muscular and nerve strain from correcting our fish-eyed tendency to look a bit sideways can be relieved with prismatic glasses. These bend the light rays so that the eyes can remain in their fish-eyed position and still see straight ahead. In turn this permits the eyeball to come back to its normal shape as soon as the side muscles stop hauling at it, and, as a result, other troubles, such as nearsightedness, often correct themselves.

Stereoscopic sight of man and the apes is now believed to have been as influential as their hands in developing the big human and anthropoid brain. They had the prying fingers to investigate things with, but first they had the eyes that gave them a real perspective of objects and incited their curiosity at a distance.

The thing that counts in an animal's intelligence is the size of its brain, not compared with the size of its body, but the size of its spinal cord. People point out that some brilliant people have small heads and some idiots have big ones, from which they reason that the size of the brain does not count.

This is as mistaken as saying that muscle does not count in a prize fight because a small man can sometimes whip a big man. It is an axiom that a good big man can always whip a good little man. Also a good big brain can beat a good little brain.

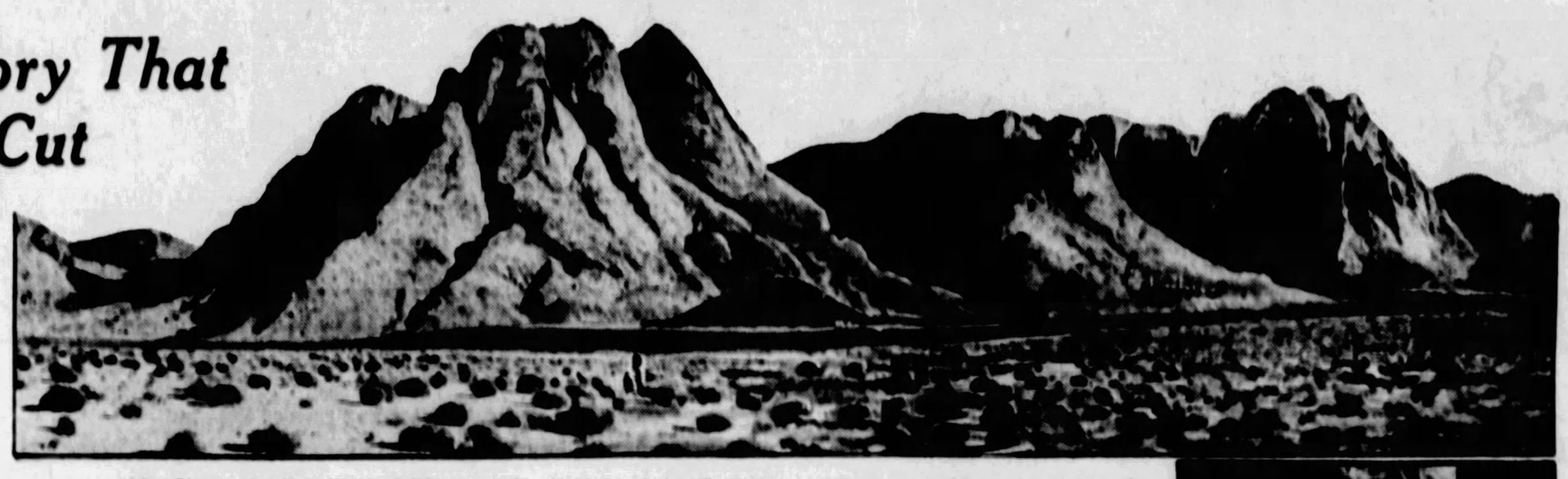
Mysterious Rock-Hewn Petra the Real Mt. Sinai?

The Interesting New Theory That the Strange Ancient City, Cut All in Stone, Was the Spot Where Moses Received the Ten Commandments



Mt. Sinai, the Traditional Place of the Giving of the Ten Commandments to Moses by Jehovah.

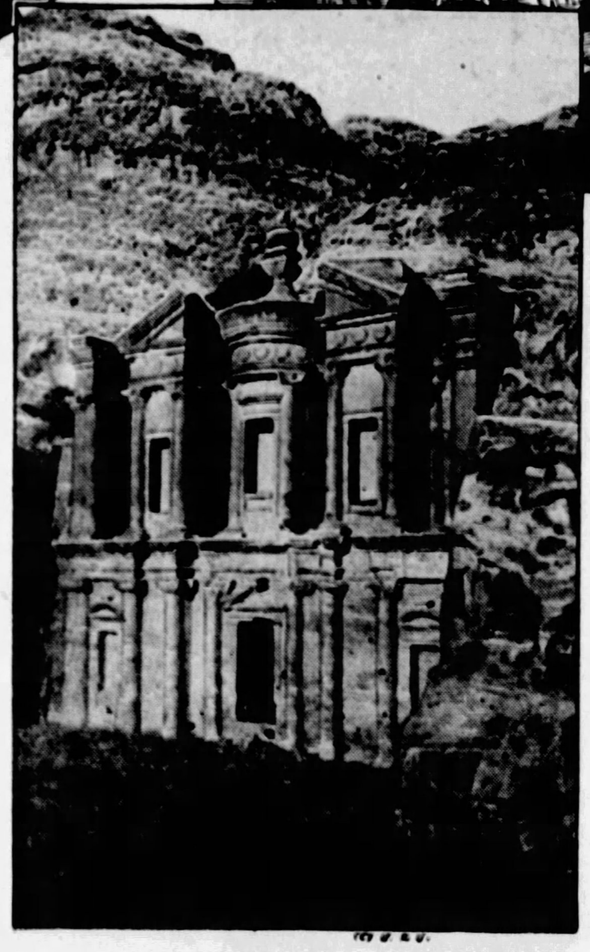
The Narrow Entrance to Mysterious Petra, a Mere Slit in the Encircling Precipices.



The "Treasury of Pharaoh," One of the Remarkable Buildings of Petra Which Are Hewn Out of the Living Rock.

NEW interest has been aroused in the marvelous and mysterious old rich city of Petra, situated in the desert east of the River Jordan.

It is now believed by some archaeologists that Petra was the site of the actual Mount Sinai, where Moses received the Ten Commandments from the Lord and handed them down to the people of Israel. Some Biblical scholars entertain doubts whether these events could have occurred at the traditional spot in the wilderness of Sinai, a place remote from Palestine

It is considered by those who are opposed to the traditional site that these vital events in the history of Israel occurred at some site adjacent to the Holy Land, such as the rocky plateau where Petra is situated. It was a very early stronghold of the Jewish race.

The National Geographic Society in a bulletin calling attention to the possibility that Petra was the place from which the laws of Israel were distributed, says:

"The city was the Suez and Panama of its day, a meeting place for the chief trade routes. Incense, spices and other treasures of the East came from India, Persia and farther Arabia to this 'safety deposit' of the desert. From there goods were distributed to Egypt, Palestine and Syria, and through Tyre and Sidon to the Mediterranean countries to the west. An important special traffic of the city was the furnishing of Dead Sea bitumen to the embalmers of Egypt.

"How far Petra reaches back into antiquity is not known, but its history is at least known sketchily from about 600 B. C. It is now suggested that the more ancient town may have served as a distributing center for the religious ideas of the East as its successor served in forwarding Eastern goods."

Petra has been immortalized by Tennyson as "a rose-red city half as old as time." In ancient days it rose to greatness and fell several times until at last under the Arabs, it sank into complete decay for 1,500 years. For centuries it was as much as an explorer's life was worth to approach its mysterious, rock-hewn temples and palaces. Only since the war has it become possible to explore its remarkable ruins and gorges.

The rocky entrance to the city was an element in its ancient strength. From a desert plain one enters a narrow canyon which is a mere cleft in towering walls of red sandstone. Along the bottom of this canyon a little stream flows. It is dark even at midday.

After one has followed this tortuous chasm for two miles he comes out unexpectedly into an open plain, a mile across, entirely surrounded by sheer cliffs and precipitous slopes. Through the center runs a little stream, which was the municipal water supply a thousand years ago. On the ground on each side of the stream rose the original city.

Nearly all remains of the early city on the plain have vanished, but on the mountain slopes stand imperishable monuments. One-piece buildings have been carved out of the solid sandstone and are almost as well preserved today as when the chisels of their creators were laid down.

The most striking of these buildings is the so-called "Treasury of Pharaoh," a product of the Greek period several centuries before Christ. The Arabs of the surrounding desert called it by that name because they believed it was built by the Pharaohs.

Another rock-hewn masterpiece is the Greek theatre that seated 10,000 spectators. Thousands of tombs carved in the rock look down on the surrounding plain.

In Biblical times Petra was the capital of the Nabataeans, the direct descendants of Ishmael, the half-brother of Isaac, who was sent out into the desert on account of the jealousy of Sarah and settled upon this mighty rock, founding a nation that was to awe its contemporaries in later times. Hagar, his mother, had inspired her son with hatred of all men, for she had been treated most cruelly, sent out into the desert with her little boy and a jar of water and a loaf of bread.

Later Esau, the mighty hunter and brother of Jacob, took refuge here after he had sold his birthright for a mess of pottage. Both Ishmael and Esau were well fitted to be the ancestors of a vigorous population.

The Nabataeans became the pirates of the desert, preying from their rocky fastness upon the rich caravans that passed near here between various countries of Asia and between Asia and Egypt.

From inscriptions recently recovered it is believed that Moses stopped here during his years of wandering at the head of the Chosen People between Egypt and the Promised Land. His wisdom and statesmanlike qualities perhaps induced the Nabataeans to accept him as an honored guest.

It is the contention of those who think that the revelation of the Ten Commandments was made at Petra that Moses received his inspiration on one of "the high places" above the city. These were holy places, served by wise priests, and the god Sin, who gave his name to Mt. Sinai, seems to have been worshipped there.

An archaeologist connected with the British Museum recently found in Jerusalem a number of exquisitely engraved precious stones and some equally beautiful designs of golden ornaments. Some of gems were Assyrian and others Egyptian. One, a very curious golden buckle, was ancient Cretan.

Investigation showed that they were bought from an Arab sheikh who furnished protection to caravans in northern Arabia. The gems were said to be part of the treasure unearthed by Arabs in Petra, which was near the route they traveled.

The Arab who had sold the gems was finally found, and confessed that the relics came from Petra.

According to the story of the Arab, some wandering Bedouins encamped in Petra, in the upper valley, close to the Treasury. One of them passed back into the deep rooms within the cliff. Poking around among the debris he had stepped upon "a moving stone."

The stone had tilted and dropped him into a shallow vault. It had then crashed back into place, leaving him in darkness. He came to the opening of a passage, and had cautiously made his way along this. After feeling his way for what he thought a half mile and climbing always upward, he had seen before him a faint light. Going toward it he had come out into a large chamber, from which six other passages led further back into the mountain.

In the center of this chamber, raised high on a pedestal, was a huge urn. The light in the place came from a fissure in the wall.

He was frightened, but filled with curiosity. He climbed the pedestal and looked into the stone urn. Within it was a heap of gems and gold. He took a couple of handfuls and knotted them in his cap. He had then gone to the fissure through which the light streamed, but found it too narrow for him to slip through. He had picked up a large rock on the floor, and in desperation had hammered at the sides of the fissure, around which he had noticed a wide crack.

This crack enlarged under his blows and a large piece of rock dropped away, showing a wide aperture. He had crawled along this and found himself out on the side of the mountain far above the valley. He managed, by scrambling and falling, to get down in safety to his camp. It was then close to sunset. He had shown his find to the half dozen others of the family and then had spent several days both in trying to find "the stone that moved" or the fissure through which he had escaped, but without success.

The ancients had great skill in contriving secret passageways and doors whose entrances were apparently part of the stone walls themselves, but which, by a cunningly devised system of balances, would easily open under pressure at a certain spot. If the story of the Arab was true, it may well be that the Bedouin by accident had touched or stepped upon the spot that controlled a counter-balance opening a secret door and allowing him to drop through. The slab would, of course, close up behind him—not to be opened except by some one who knew where to press it from within.

The archaeologists believe that this immense treasure in gold and precious stones now remains concealed beneath the rock temples of Petra. To explore this place therefore promises not only great advantages to knowledge, but much material gain. It would be no novelty to recover large treasure from an ancient site, for the exploration of the ruins of Troy yielded $5,000,000 in gold and precious objects.

In early Bible times Petra was known as Sela. From its rocky fortresses the hordes of Nabataeans came down and fell upon the treasures being transported from one country to the other. They slew all who resisted and bore away to their homes the gold, the silk, the wool, the ebony carvings, all that the merchants might be sending from Egypt to Assyria and vice versa. Thus the Nabataeans piled up enormous wealth.

It is recorded in the Bible as one of the great victories of Amaziah, King of Jerusalem, in the ninth century, B. C., that he captured Sela and cast from "the steep of the rock" ten thousand captives who were dashed to pieces on the rocks below. The Nabataeans were known as Edomites in the Bible.

Amaziah gave a new name to Sela, as was the custom. It was then called Jechteel, but is not again mentioned by that name in the Bible.

In a later age the reputed wealth stored in Sela was so great that it attracted the attention of Antigonus, the Syrian monarch, and he sent his general, Athenes, to take it captive (312 B. C.) There was only one way in which he could capture this fortress, standing as it did hundreds of feet above the plain, and accessible only by steep defiles through the rocks, and that was to watch until the men were away. This he did, but no sooner had he taken possession than the men returned, and, aided by their better knowledge of the place, he in turn was surprised and his entire force massacred. The Nabataeans then sent magnificent presents to the monarch, begging that they be allowed to continue their commerce and agreeing to pay a heavy tax.

The son of Antigonus, Demetrius, tried, too, to capture Petra, as it was now called, and he failed miserably, the tax no longer was paid, and a mighty kingdom was formed once more under the headship of the Nabataeans, with Petra as the capital.

The first king of this great state was Aretas I, who is mentioned in the Bible. Another Aretas, the third of the line, built many of the Greek edifices and gave the city the name Petra.

Petra was annexed to the Roman Empire 106 A. D., and coins are found bearing the inscription, Adriane Petra, as a tribute to the favor of the Emperor Hadrian toward this city. It was at this time, doubtless, the most beautiful of the temples erected to Isis was built. After this time the building of the tombs stops, for it became the obscure Roman Province of Arabia, to be later divided into two parts, with Petra as the southern capital.

The reader may ask if it was likely that the Romans after centuries of occupation left vast quantities of treasure hidden in Petra. We must remember that all the vast wealth which has been found in the tombs of Tutankhamen and other Egyptian Pharaohs lay there while Rome was in possession of Egypt and was never disturbed. Doubtless the priests of the old race in both cases preserved many secrets from the conquerors.

It is known from some of the Nabataean inscriptions that the chief god of Petra was Dhu-Shara, meaning "the Lord of Shara," which was the name of the mountain in which the city was constructed. Side by side with him was a great feminine goddess called Allat, who was the goddess of the Arabians before the days of Mohammed.

Dhu-Shara was worshiped under the form of a great black rectangular stone, very much like the Kaaba of the Arabs, and the space sacred to him was very carefully marked off. At the borders two great obelisks, possibly idols of the two divinities, marked the boundary of the sacred place.

Below the altar there seems to have been a crypt going far into the bowels of the mountain. In it was thrown the remains of the victims sacrificed to the god and his terrible mate. Perhaps also treasure was concealed in this place.

Certainly discoveries of vast importance to Biblical scholars and archaeologists may be expected from the thorough exploration of Petra.

Canary Birds Trained to Sing Grand Opera

Remarkable Results Achieved in a San Francisco Conservatory for Feathered Songsters Where 800 Birds Are Kept in Sound-Proof Boxes So They Will Not Mix Up Each Other's Melodies

FOR three hundred years patient Germans have been training canaries to sing, and yet they never did really sing, but only repeated such pretty trills and chirps as naturally appealed to the little creatures.

It remained for two Americans, Mr. and Mrs. P. E. McCoy, of San Francisco, to teach them real tunes, all the way from jazz to grand opera melodies, which they sing as faultlessly as a prima donna.

The McCoys have devoted themselves twenty-one years to building up their Canary Musical Academy with its 800 to 850 feathered students, who are not only taught the vocal art, but lodged, fed and bred. They have to work fast; the whole job, from egg to finished article, must be done in one year, for art is long and life is extra short with the canary.

Mrs. McCoy sees no reason why, in a short time, it will not be possible to produce thirty little singers capable of rendering a slightly condensed arrangement of all the consecutive melodies of most any of the operas. Mr. McCoy's ambition goes beyond that. He says he will not be content until he has taught one of his birds to talk with him.

Maude Adams, in Rostand's Fantastic Barnyard Play "Chanticleer." If the Birds Could Only Be Taught to Act as Well as They Sing, a Very Creditable Grand Opera Production Might Be Staged.

The idea of training canaries to sing real tunes has been thought of often enough before, but why it never was successful is evident to anyone who visits that canary operatic school on the Pacific Coast, where over 800 pupils study in cages side by side, and yet must not be led astray by hearing each other's mistakes nor confused by listening to arias that are not suited to their vocal range.

Kipling once said of an unusually successful Gloucester fishing skipper who always knew where to find his fish, that he thought like a fish. This is the basis of the McCoys' triumph. They have learned the processes of the canary's brain, which, though smaller than your thumbnail, is alert and intelligent.

To begin with, the McCoys have bred only from the best Herz Mountain roller canaries, which they have found better than others chiefly because they are smarter. Apparently you can't teach a stupid bird any more than you can teach a stupid man, and talent tends to run in bird families just as it does in human families, so they have bred from their most apt pupils.

One large room in the academy is the nursery, where for the first four weeks of life the future feathered star is left entirely to its mother's care. Then it is taken from the nest and placed in one of the flight cages, which are never smaller than three feet by two feet by two feet and can accommodate not more than ten birds. Here they are left alone to exercise and become as robust as is possible for a creature no bigger than a spool of silk, until they are four months old and have finished their first moulting.

Childhood is now over and education begins, but first their teachers had to solve a mechanical problem. It is necessary that 800 pupils should have 800 sound-proof cages. A sound-proof box is easily built, but these also had to be lighted and ventilated. The lighting was managed with a door containing a round window, consisting of two thicknesses of glass with an air space between. The ventilation required pipes covered with felt and containing baffle-plates of felt inside to exclude sound. Without these sound-proof cages the place would be a bird madhouse, where they would learn nothing but noise.

The elementary pupils are first placed in cages on shelves in the selection room, where their doors can be opened, permitting them to be taught in classes. Describing this stage, Mr. McCoy says:

Mrs. Adela McCoy, Holding "Caruso," the $500 German Canary That Astonished the Pacific Coast Recently by Rendering a German Folk Song and Also "Over There" Over the Radio.

"Care is given to the quality and pitch of the tones being produced by the birds. A shrill, high-pitched note is not characteristic of the roller canary, but if not watched the bird will begin to sing just such a note. So we concentrate on quality and pitch for individual pupils. Also, we begin to select those who will become 'tune singers' and those who, for one imperfection or another, are not likely prospects for anything other than to become high-caste rollers.

"As soon as the young bird's notes begin to increase in volume he is put in a darkened, well-ventilated box for a month or two, where his modulated song is developed under the tutorship of a teacher bird—one chosen for the softness of his song and the variety of his notes. The full roller song consists of thirteen tones, which the bird fanciers have classified and named as follows: The hollow roll, bass gluck roll, water glucke, hollow bell, shockel, flute, bell roll, bell tour, koller, glucke, deep bubbling water tour and water roll.

"It is not expected that a single bird will master all of these tones, but the more of them he is able to sing, the better bird he is considered. The other points that determine the bird's value, aside from his ability as a 'tune singer,' are the quality of the tone and the manner in which the song is delivered."

A teacher of human singers can fool around with his pupil for years, but the McCoys must turn out a perfect product after less than eight months' actual training. As there are only two professors in the faculty of this college, Mr. and Mrs. McCoy could not do the work without a lot of faithful assistants to break the beginners in and save time. These assistants are the teacher birds, and they are all males, because among birds the female is the quiet sex.

When the teacher bird has carried his tutoring as far as he can, one of the two heads of the academy takes up the education of the more promising students.

To instruct the birds the McCoys take them individually from their sound-proof compartments. They place a bird on a table and begin to whistle him the tune he is to learn, pitching it to suit his range. As the bird progresses, they interrupt those portions of the tune incorrectly rendered and whistle the right notes. The bird will listen attentively. Then, oddly enough, the bird will repeat just those notes—and proceed with the remainder of the song. Sometimes, the bird breaks into his native roller "tours" or warblings. The McCoys thereupon scold him.

"No!"—"Quit that!"—"You stop that!"

The bird is not frightened by this sharp command perhaps, but is a bit temperamental. He stops, extends his feathers, making himself as big and menacing as possible, and then picks up the tune usually at the point where he had wandered from it.

But still there are not enough hours in the day to give 800 pupils attention, so again ingenuity was called for. Down in the cellar of the college is a quite ordinary, old-fashioned hot air furnace but it never has a fire in it. Beside the furnace stand an electric phonograph with a repeating attachment and a pipe carrying the sound from the machine to the furnace.

From there the music ascends the air-pipes to the registers in the various rooms. By simply opening and closing registers, the McCoys can fill from one to half a dozen training rooms with the tone which the mechanical teacher in the basement grinds out. Care has to be taken with those records, for birds, like children, readily pick up bad habits and would try to imitate the raucous mocking of the saxophone if they heard it.

"If from our first record, made in 1919, we have been able to teach scores of birds to sing—and from our second, a flute record—we have elaborated our system of training without overtaxing the strength or abilities of our specially-bred 'family,' who should scoff and say that the teaching of operatic arias in synopsis form is an impossibility?" asks Mrs. McCoy. "These birds are highly intelligent. If man could make a telegraph, a camera, a radio, an automobile—why cannot a strain of birds be developed who shall sing all our sings?"

"Or talk?" adds Mr. McCoy. "I mean really talk. There must be a way to add talking to their new talent in singing. Wouldn't it be wonderful to work that out? I will never be happy till I talk with a canary bird. He is a well behaved, high-minded, thoughtful, little animal and I have great respect for him."

One of the star graduates of the conservatory is "Caruso," for whom the wife of a Western millionaire recently paid $500, many times his weight in gold, after she had heard him sing a German folk song, followed by "Over there," on the radio. Other high-priced feathered alumni are owned by some of the big movie stars, and one is owned by Richard B. Mellon, brother of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The night that "Caruso" broadcast, the McCoys were late in starting and had to make a quick and rough taxi trip with him to the radio station. There, in a strange room, among strange people, "Caruso's" cage was opened and he was invited to sing while a few million listeners, knowing the usual obstinacy of pets on important occasions, wondered how long they would have to wait. Within two minutes of his arrival, "Caruso" was on the air, not only delighting his great human audience but causing a number of cats to take their first real interest in radio.

The birds can learn the operatic arias and they have naturally most all kinds of voices, tenors, sopranos, contraltos; though the basso profundo has not yet been found. The canary's tiny lungs only hold a thimbleful of air, so how can they produce a volume that will fill an auditorium and at the same time hold a note as long as a grand opera prima donna with a six or seven-inch chest expansion? For one reason, because the bird can sing equally well whether his breath is going in or out, while the human singer has a one-way voice. Another thing that helps perhaps, is the fact that the bird carries a reserve supply of air in the hollow bones of his wings. Hunters have observed that birds can breathe through a shattered wing even when their throats are choked with blood.

However, the tiny mites have not the physical endurance of the human singer and cannot keep going a whole evening, not more than half as long as a Jeritza or a Gigli.

The canary is able to produce a volume of sound out of all proportion to the air used, because the birds have a different and more efficient vocal apparatus. A bird has rigid lips of horn and does not sing with its mouth or throat, though it seems to, but from the top of its lungs.

The voice machinery in human beings is a little arrangement in the throat above the windpipe. It is called the larynx and is a sort of box, well protected in front by cartilages, rather more open behind, and communicating above with the throat at the root of the tongue and below with the windpipe. It has two bands of elastic fibre stretched across it. One pair of these bands lies directly above the other, the upper pair being known as the false vocal cords and the lower pair the true vocal cords. The latter are capable of various degrees of tenseness and slackness and of approximation and separation. The vibration of these cords under the passage of air from the lungs produces the tones that are the fundamental sounds of voice and speech and singing.

The bird has nothing at all like this. Its vocal organ is called the syrinx. Instead of being formed by a special structure at the upper end of the windpipe, it is a modification of the lower end, where it divides to enter the lungs.

The syrinx is remarkably uniform among all birds, no matter what the sound they produce. It is composed of the last few bony rings imbedded in the membranous wall of the windpipe and the upper rings of the bronchial tubes that carry air from the windpipe to the lungs. The membrane which makes up the inner wall of each bronchial tube joins with the windpipe and extends some little way into it as a thin fold of tissue held up by a bony framework. The expansion and contraction of this membrane is controlled by from one to seven pairs of muscles, and it is by the action of these muscles in changing the shape of the membrane as it vibrates in the air current of the bird's breathing that song is produced. This action is similar to that of a "reed" instrument in an orchestra. In fact, the name syrinx comes from the old Grecian word for the reed-pipes which the god Pan was supposed to play.

The McCoys have shown not only what can be done by training but by breeding, which takes time. Canaries of 100 years from now may be big bodied and big brained birds, capable of outsinging and outlasting the greatest human opera star and, if Mr. McCoy's hope comes true, they may make a little introductory speech to the microphone.

Old Dutch Cleanser chases dirt – and safeguards your family with

Healthful Cleanliness

Old Dutch Cleanser homes are healthful homes

Old Dutch Cleanser protects your home with Healthful Cleanliness because it removes the dangerous invisible impurities as well as the visible uncleanliness. Old Dutch chases all dirt—none is left behind.

There is nothing else like Old Dutch. To the eye it looks like a fine powder, but through the microscope you see thousands of flaky, flat-shaped particles of distinctive character. These particles possess natural detergent qualities—they erase the dirt, and by a process similar to "adsorption" take up and carry away all impurities.

This drawing of a highly magnified Old Dutch particle illustrates how completely and safely Old Dutch works. Being flat-shaped, these particles make a perfect contact with the surface and do not scratch. With a clean sweep they leave the surface smooth and free from uncleanliness.

Old Dutch doesn't scratch. Avoid damaging grit. This drawing shows a highly magnified particle of hard, scratchy grit at work. Being of irregular shape the sharp, hard points dig into the surface and leave scratches which not only mar its beauty but are lodging places for dirt and impurities.

Scientific examination proves that surfaces cleaned with Old Dutch are wholesome hygienically clean. Old Dutch erases all visible dirt and by a process similar to "adsorption" removes dangerous invisible impurities which are often a menace to health. There is nothing else like Old Dutch to safeguard your home with healthful cleanliness.

Old Dutch doesn't scratch. This test proves it. Pour a little Old Dutch on a porcelain table top or the sink, and rub with a smooth coin. You will see there is no grit and no scratches.

Mystery of the Murders in the Lonely African Lighthouse

France Seeking Vengeance Upon the Arab Raiders From the Desert Who Slew the Keeper and His Men and Quenched the Great Beam That Warned the Ships Away From the Perilous Coast

The Lonely Light on Cape Blanc and the Little Palm Grove Where the Wives of the Murdered Men Were Hidden.

Mme. Kereniec, Widow of the Keeper of the Light.

The Stronghold of the Arab Tribe of Oued Delim, Suspected of the Raid Upon the Lighthouse.

Two of the Mauritania Natives With Their Unpleasant-Looking Knives.

Shooting One of the Assistant Keepers, the Mysterious Raiders Rushed the Stairs to the Light. Head Keeper Kereniec and His Other Assistant, Unarmed Except for Wrench and Hammer, Battled Heroically to Save It. Their Courage Was Useless. Down They Fell Under the Bullets of the Murderers, Who Then Vanished.

PARIS, March 17.

THERE are some crimes that seem to reach the limit of human wickedness, and one of these is the killing or crippling of a lighthouse keeper with the consequent blinding of the great eye of light upon which depends the lives of scores and hundreds of ships it guides.

Such a crime has just been committed at the lonely light of Cape Blanc, one of the swampy warts on the southern face of Africa's huge western bulge. Cape Blanc is on the coast of Mauritania, a country of savage cannibals and Arab bandits over which France exercises a shaky control. The keeper of its light, Jules Kereniec, a Breton, and his two assistants, like him, Bretons, were slaughtered while guarding the great lamp.

Whether the fierce black savages, or the even crueler Arabs, killed the lighthouse men the French Colonial Office is trying to find out. The two terrified women—the wives of Kereniec and of one of his assistants—who had escaped the swift raid, could not tell.

As mysterious as the identity of the murderers is the reason for their crime. Nothing was stolen from the lighthouse, nor was the great lamp nor its mechanism wrecked or damaged. There was the swift assault, the brief struggle in the tower and the swift retreat of the killers.

If it were the cannibals who had made the raid, then why did they not take the bodies of the dead with them? If it were the Arabs, bent on plunder, why did they leave the contents of the lighthouse untouched?

These are all questions that the French Colonial Office is trying to find the answers for. Whatever the solution of the mystery of the murders in the lonely light of Cape Blanc, there is no question that the affair has done more to shake the idea of white superiority in the region than anything that has happened for years, including the torture of two French airmen in the same locality not so long ago. These were finally killed by the "death of the red hot pot," an unpleasant custom which readers of Rider Haggard's "She" will remember.

Mauritania has been called the forgotten land of creation. But the light on Cape Blanc was of first importance Rooted in the swamp, eight miles from Port Etienne, itself a tiny fortified village entrenched against attack from the tribes to the east, it threw a beam of white light at five seconds intervals visible at twenty-five miles. It was the beacon to all shipping rounding the bulge of the continent on the route to Dakar, Freetown and the Cape. Big passenger boats, round the world cruises, freighters, all sorts and kinds of craft depended upon the Cape Blanc light to keep them clear of the perilous banks and shoals stretching for miles off the coast.

In this remote tower of the West African coast, according to the fragmentary reports which have been allowed to leak through strict governmental censorship, lived Lighthouse Keeper Kereniec, his two assistants and the two women. Bretons all, of that sturdy stock which furnishes France its seafaring men, the lighthouse personnel was strangely alien to the corner of earth to which they had been transplanted by government order.

They lived lonely lives. Once a week one of them hoisted the sail of a small boat and went up the Bay of the Hound to Port Etienne for supplies and mail. Twice a year they were visited by the supply boat of the government lighthouse service, which anchored about a mile off shore and refilled their petroleum tanks. For the rest, their contacts with the outside world were the glimpses of coastwise shipping which, using their light as a guide, gingerly skirted the dangerous sand banks which lie along this treacherous coast.

In a palm grove nearby, the little colony had set up two rude thatched shelters to protect their boats against torrential equatorial rains. The women often spent their days in this grove, enjoying the shade and trying their luck at digging shellfish out of the beach sands.

Fortunately, on the day of the raid, the women were thus occupied. Fortunately, too, for them, their attention was not attracted by the stealthy movements of men from the mainland direction, who making a detour around a palm grove in the cove, continued on toward the lighthouse.

At this moment Lightkeeper Kereniec was up in the lamp room trimming his wicks against the coming evening. Downstairs in the common room one of his assistants was asleep. The other was at the petroleum tank. In the unguarded entry of the structure stood a rack containing three loaded rifles, the only arms of the unsuspecting garrison.

In the book of rules of the lighthouse service on colonial soil are certain regulations concerning the maintenance of a guard. But, in this remote and inaccessible spot, never visited by the natives, it was only natural that this duty should, in the long run, be neglected as superfluous. Attack was far from the minds of the lightkeepers.

The assassins crept up to the lighthouse entrance and made noiseless entry. In a moment they were in possession of the weapons of the three keepers.

The rest of the tragedy of Cape Blanc can be told in few words. The sleeping assistant in the common room died, mercifully unaware of his peril. The leader of the attacking force simply threw open the door of the room, carefully aimed at the head of the sleeper and pulled the trigger.

Kereniec and the first assistant apparently had tried to guard the lamp. But their only weapons were a wrench and hammer. Nevertheless, they made an heroic fight. It was useless. Kereniec's body, a bullet hole between the eyes, was found at the foot of the stairs leading upward to the lamp room. A little further down was that of the assistant.

This reconstruction of the butchery was what the Port Etienne authorities were able to deduct from the position of the bodies of the murdered men the next day. Meanwhile, the first hint of the trouble down the coast had come to Port Etienne in the shape of a signal flashed from a passing freighter, which reported that evening that the light was dead.

It was nearly daybreak before the small lighthouse dory, sailed by two hysterical women, came into Port Etienne. The two widowed survivors of the slaughter had courageously rushed to the assistance of their husbands at the first shot. But in the five minutes which they lost crossing the peninsula from the cove to the lighthouse, the rapid drama had played to its end and they came up in time only to hear a few muffled cries, the snorts of camels in flight, and to have their worst fears confirmed by the spectacle which met their eyes in the common room of the lighthouse.

They saw no living creature.

At dawn an airplane, with orders to fly over the inland brush and desert sand in search of any native party on camel back, rose from the Port Etienne landing field. The most effective patrol of the desert is that effected in the air. However, in this instance, the search was vain. The raiders had disappeared without leaving any trace.

Not only was this so, but, the victims of the slaughter having died of wounds inflicted by their own guns, the Port Etienne authorities could only guess at the identity of the murderers. Had the latter used their own weapons, the authorities could have determined by examination of the dead bodies the ownership of the instruments of the crime.

This is the region where Arab and Negro dispute supremacy of numbers. The white conqueror deals here with not one but two alien races. Black and brown settlements alternate in the strip of arid sand, at once the southern limit of Moroccan and northern limit of Senegalese expansions. The problem for the authorities was and still is: Did a band of Moroccan tribesmen make the attack on Cape Blanc or must punishment of the crime be visited on one of the tribes of black Africans of the district?

One and the other have checkered past records.

That of the Arab tribe of the Oued Delim is particularly and most recently red with the blood of the white conqueror. The Oued Delim lies in the desert "bad lands" along the boundary of the Spanish colony of Rio De Oro, and is known to be the center of some of the most desperate assaults against European domination.

It was the tribesmen of Delim who, a year back, seized two stranded airmen of the Latocere trans-African mail service, and, after destroying their machines, subjected the pilots to the torture of the "hot pot" and put them to death. There are various recorded descriptions of torture by the "hot pot," the classical one being Rider Haggard's fictional description in the novel, "She." Here the "hot pot" is exactly what its name implies—a heated vessel which is clamped over the victim's head, and which, though horribly picturesque, is actually quite merciful, as it kills quickly by suffocation.

The miserable end of the two Latocere pilots was hushed up by the directors of the pioneer African air service company, doubtless on the advice of the government, which accords them heavy subsidies. Even the names of the two murdered pilots have never been clearly established.

Altogether, the record of the Oued Delim was such, then, as instantly to center suspicion on them of guilt in the crime of Cape Blanc—suspicions which are all the more natural because Cape Blanc is near to their impregnable homeland.

However, although the local black tribes of Mauritania are much less bellicose and rebellious than that of Oued Delim, they cannot completely escape all suspicion.

Not so long ago France was horrified to learn that one of its citizens, M. Huberson, a trader in the French colonies of Senegalia and the Ivory Coast, had been captured and eaten by cannibal natives of the latter. The incident was all the more astounding because Frenchmen had been led to believe that cannibalism had long since been stamped out in the colonial possessions.

With the various petty kings of the black empires under their control, the French now have "treaties" looking to the abolition of savage customs of cannibalism and human slavery. In the Port Etienne region King K'Si, of the native Mauritanian blacks, is guarantor to the white overlords of the strict observance by his subjects of white law.

Once a year a quaint native ceremony renews this "contract" between the black natives and the white rulers. King K'Si, at the head of his fierce bodyguard of spearbearers rides out of the desert into the fortified zone of the Port Etienne fish curing field and solemnly "offers his head for the sins of his people."

It so happens that this annual ceremony, an empty one hitherto, is scheduled to take place in February. And the white citizens of Port Etienne, thoroughly aroused and angered by the recent outrage of Cape Blanco are agitating for a strict application of the terms of the contract.

If King K'Si's head is the forfeit for the crimes of his people, they argue, let it fall now, as a salutary lesson to the native dissidents.

Perplexed, the authorities do not know where to strike in retaliation for the blow dealt at their prestige at Cape Blanc.

MARTHE DALBANE'S dramatic suicide gesture had defeated all her adversaries at one blow.

As related in the last chapter, the tragedy of Rene Jacquard not only added one more to the series of fatalities among the young and wealthy admirers of this mysterious beauty who had become known as the "Death Flower" but it ruined all her plans and prospects.

The "Death Flower's" relations with the great Parisian surgeon, Dr. Thierry de Martel, had been broken off because his fashionable women friends and patients had used the Jacquard publicity as an excuse for insisting that he have nothing more to do with Marthe.

Instruction Judge Bacquart, who was striving to solve the mystery of all the deaths that follow in the "Death Flower's" footsteps and to prevent any more, had trapped her as an illicit user of narcotic drugs. She foresaw trial, conviction and then the dreaded drug cure. Meanwhile the activities of the police had caused all drug peddlers and her addict friends to shun her. She was suffering the tortures of a drug fiend deprived of drugs.

And then, in the middle of the night, Marthe's maid telephoned the surgeon that her mistress, Mlle. Dalbane, had swallowed a handful of veronal tablets and with her last conscious breath had mentioned his name. The fashionable surgeon forgot the commands of his fashionable patients and patronesses and rushed to the bedside of the woman he had admired and probably still admired—for that romance had not been permitted to burn itself out and die of natural causes.

In the morning the ladies who had banished the "Death Flower" were chagrined to learn that she was in the best room of Dr. de Martel's private hospital and enjoying his personal attention. Judge Bacquart had to postpone her trial indefinitely and the police could no longer keep Marthe from her drugs. They knew she would get her morphine at the doctor's orders, for this would be no time to try to cure her.

Still Marthe's triumph was short-lived. The kind doctor's feminine monitors watched the situation carefully and began to insist that his lively patient get well or—something. So after a few weeks Marthe found herself out in the cold world again with no way to procure drugs because the stony-hearted police were again at her dainty heels.

But the police are not always stony-hearted, especially to a woman who can make herself useful as well as ornamental to them. The very day Marthe returned to her apartment from the hospital and was considering doing a real job of suicide, she received a call from Inspector Rene Faralieq, whom everyone in France knew to be one of the most famous catchers of criminals in the world.

What could the great sleuth want with her? It must be that he thought her responsible for all those mysterious deaths. Was he going to charge her with murder? But Faralieq made no references to that unpleasant subject. He talked sympathetically about her health, her nerves and how cruel it must be to be deprived of drugs just as she was getting out of the hospital and was facing trial and the dreaded drug cure.

Marthe knew that Faralieq was too big a man to bother with drug violators and she wondered but said nothing, which is about the best thing one can say to a detective when one is guilty of something. The detective went on most pleasantly. He thought the police were a bit harsh but they were only doing their duty. However, the authorities were always just and grateful and a small offender might be forgiven in consideration of assistance in catching a bigger one.

The "Death Flower" still said nothing and Faralieq told her of a series of audacious and unsolved burglaries in and around Paris, many of which she had read about.

"You don't mean you want me to catch the 'Society Burglar?'" she gasped in dismay. This was too much. How could she, a nervous wreck of a woman, catch the shrewd criminal with nerves of steel whom even the great Faralieq himself could not handle?

"Yes," said the detective, "it will be very easy for you and save me a lot of time. The person we want is a young man who moves in fashionable society and, I am quite sure, has a title. I am equally sure that he has no wife, or she would have complained in the divorce courts or otherwise. Men embezzle for their wives and occasionally commit one big theft for them, but when a gentleman turns robber permanently it is for a sweetheart, and as the wife gets none of the plunder she is the first to tell on him.

"The main thing for you to know is that he is deeply infatuated with a most extravagant cocotte, who evidently lives in Paris, because it is the centre of all his work. Now you are personally acquainted with all the cocottes who are brilliant and beautiful enough, like yourself, to attract a young noble, but also are hard-hearted enough to drive a youth to stealing and to live on the loot. Ask about them, if necessary talk with them, find out who their admirers are and then see me. We will catch our bird."

"But I will make enemies," objected Marthe, "and I have plenty now."

"No," said Faralieq, "your name need never appear in the matter. Once we know who the man is, it will be easy to invent some other clue. We can say that it was through the description given by Mme. ——'s maid."

Faralieq then related how the maid of a well-known society woman of Paris had met the burglar and chatted with him. She was returning from some sort of gay little affair of her own at 3 A. M. and unlocked the front door as noiselessly as possible, hoping nobody would hear her at that unseemly hour.

To her astonishment, as she stepped in, she was confronted by a man and almost screamed. But she restrained herself because he was such an elegant gentleman, handsome and young, in evening dress, a fur coat over his arm and a silk hat towering above his smiling face.

"Sh-sh!" he warned in a whisper. "Don't let your mistress know you saw me. She would be dreadfully upset. Ah, how I love her. She is the most adorable woman in the world. What a mischance that you should catch us. She thought you were in bed and asleep. Promise you will never let anyone know."

He pressed a 20 franc note into the maid's hand and she kept her promise until next morning when the robbery was discovered.

Marthe accepted Faralieq's commission. Her expenses were paid and a small salary, but the great reward was a negative one. The shadows that had dogged her footsteps dogged no more. She could go as she pleased, which meant that she could procure drugs again, and as time went on it became evident that Judge Bacquart was forgetting to set any date for that trial.

Faralieq was right in prophesying that Marthe would find the work rather easy. With a little thought she narrowed the list of high class cocottes down to less than a dozen who would be mean enough to fill the bill. Within a few weeks she had eliminated all but one of these and was able to point almost with certainty to the young Viscount Serge de Lenz, the admirer of Mademoiselle N——, whom Marthe knew as a confirmed cocaine addict.

After that Faralieq did the rest and soon he had the young nobleman behind the bars and a full confession. The speedy trial and conviction that followed were new feathers in the great detective's cap, but it had been necessary for him to hold several conferences with Marthe Dalbane and it seems that no man can look into the eyes of the "Death Flower" many times without being affected powerfully. It is said that it was her influence which caused Faralieq to leave the Surete and open a private detective agency of his own. The inspector admits that he is a great admirer of Marthe, but denies that she influences his career.

Be that as it may, Marthe for a long time was not annoyed by the attentions of the police and also somehow managed to keep out of the papers. She began to hope that the "Death Flower" tradition had been forgotten, when suddenly it was on everyone's lips again in connection with the murder of the Egyptian Prince Fahmy Bey.

Fahmy Bey was murdered in London at the Savoy Hotel by his own wife, once the notorious Maggie Meller, but Fahmy had once been an admirer of Marthe and therefore all Paris said:

"There goes another!"

The "Death Flower" had met Fahmy while she was in Egypt during her romance with Boussac, the textile magnate. As previously related, there were separations and quarrels between Boussac and Marthe after their return to Paris, culminating in his slashing of Boussac's throat with a razor.

During that time Fahmy also returned to Paris, renewed the acquaintance and seems to have been used by Marthe as a sort of consolation. But the romance was short and fitful and the Prince had retired from the horizon by the time Dr. de Martel, after sewing up Boussac's throat, took his patient's place in Marthe's regards.

Marthe is the daughter of a coal miner and Maggie Meller is even more a self-made woman, having started as a Paris street gamin and by various methods made herself first the wife and then the widow of a Prince whose fortune has been estimated at from $15,000,000 to $30,000,000. So she started a little lower and in some ways worked higher than the "Death Flower," who, in spite of all the money that has passed through her fingers, has never captured a title.

At the age of fourteen Maggie was a cabaret dancer much sought after by rich men and digging more gold than she knew what to do with. But she turned all her wealthy admirers down in favor of a starving art student, who rewarded her by calling the romance off at the time she needed him most. A baby was born and for several years lived at a foundling asylum while Maggie returned to dancing and gold-digging.

Her great chance came when she was scarcely of age. M. Andre Meller, the millionaire racehorse owner, educated her and made her outwardly as much a lady as any duchess and he wished to marry her and adopt her waif of a child. They were formally engaged and everyone envied her, but just before the wedding she changed her mind and married M. Charles Laurient, interpreter for the Japanese Legation at Paris.

It was a love match, but it didn't match, and soon Maggie was divorced with an alimony allowance which she eked out with dancing and gold-digging. Paris had about decided that Maggie had gone about as high as she could and then along came Prince Fahmy Bey, rich, young and handsome. Beauties from all over set their caps at him. He was a catch for a daughter of any of the oldest houses in France, but Maggie, the educated street gamin, caught him.

Soon there were rumors that the Prince and Princess were leading a cat and dog life and everyone wondered how soon she would divorce him or run away. She did neither, because all her husband's millions were in Egypt and under Egyptian law she would not have gotten any of them no matter what some European court might order. So Maggie stuck to her Prince and, Oh, how they quarreled.

Finally, in their suite at the Savoy in London, she shot him to death. At the trial it was shown that each slept with a pistol under his or her pillow. The Princess said that he had reached under his pillow to pull his gun and that she had done the same thing in self-defense and shot first.

As the only other witness to that scene was dead the English jury acquitted her. It was thought at the time that the prosecution did not drive the charges home against the accused with the customary vigor of homicide cases in England. In groping around for reasons it was rumored that the Princess Fahmy had known a personage very high in influential British social life and had threatened to make capital of that fact unless she was treated gently.

After her acquittal the self-made widow denied having known this person except for a brief chat after an accidental introduction such as might happen to almost any girl in the midst of the gay life of Paris on such occasions as the exalted personage breaks away and steps out all by himself.

Of all the numerous admirers of Marthe whose deaths have given her the name of "Death Flower" not one left her any money. It looked as if her friend Maggie, by one death which she had managed herself, would get a widow's share of that tremendous fortune. On the strength of that supposition the dressmakers of London staked the Princess Maggie to as beautiful and becoming a mourning wardrobe as anyone can remember.

But when the widow called on her late husband's relatives in Cairo they were not at home.

"Oh, very well," said the Princess Maggie, "I will just collect my widow's mite of five or six millions and go back to Paris."

But, alas, in Egypt and most other Oriental countries the laws try to discourage women from killing their husbands, and therefore a self-made widow gets nothing from her husband's estate. Even the jewels with which the Princess had been loaded down were grabbed during the trial by a representative of the Egyptian Government in behalf of the Egyptian courts. Like all the rest of Fahmy's property, they were turned over to those same relatives who were not at home when the widow called.

The quite undeserved publicity which Marthe received in connection with the murder of the Egyptian Prince seems to have convinced her that her best days as a gold-digger de luxe were over. The tradition that everyone who loved the "Death Flower" would die had at last scared the wealthy admirers away. Since Boussac and Dr. de Martel no really rich man had shown interest. She must find some other means of support.

Marthe's association with the police in helping Faralieq run down the burglar suggested the idea of capitalizing her knowledge of the underworld and the weaknesses of men. The "Death Flower" decided to embark on a business career for which she would need capital. Her funds were low, but she sold her magnificent Avenue Bugeaud house and its furnishings. With the proceeds she rented offices at No. 8 Rue des Petites Ecuries and hung out a very businesslike looking sign which read

"DALBANY, RENDEZVOUS AGENCY."

This was really a gold-digger's clearing house and private post office. There were others in Paris but Marthe introduced a new idea. Impressed by the rogues' gallery at police headquarters, Mlle. Dalbane or Dalbany, as she now called herself, created a file of photographs and interesting facts of the principal professional beauties of Paris. Also she kept tabs on men with more money than brains, particularly such as considered themselves misunderstood by their wives.

Any of her fair clients who succeeded in getting into the pockets of any man through Marthe's information paid her a handsome fee. If a lonesome man came to her and after studying the "gallery" was introduced to one of the beauties, he paid for the service. Often they both paid.

Also the private post office was useful and profitable. A man or woman could rent a little lock box, under any name or no name at all, and receive communications that might be embarrassing if delivered to home or office. If a man or woman left town, Marthe's agency could be relied upon to forward mail, relay telephone messages, find out if somebody's absence had been noticed or execute tactful commissions without asking questions.

Such an agency, of course, covered a multitude of sins and would be against the law in the United States. But in France it is tolerated, perhaps because in time of need the police can use it effectually as a mine of information which they could hardly obtain in any other manner.

Sitting there with the threads of so many plots and secret romances running through her fingers, Marthe was prompted to "cash in" on that knowledge also. To do this she opened entirely new offices in a different location, No. 33 rue de la Chaussee d'Antin, a thoroughfare which cuts straight through the heart of Paris to the Place de l'Opera. On her door a very modest sign read:

"Agence de renseignements."

This means literally, an agency for general information, and it might be the definition for a school or newspaper and would seem to be a praiseworthy sort of thing. As a matter of fact, these agencies are for obtaining a very special kind of information, that somebody invariably wishes to keep hidden.

If a wife, suspecting that her husband was spending too much money on some other woman, came to Marthe to get the facts, she was the lady who could accommodate her. If the "Death Flower" did not happen to know them offhand, she had only to gossip a while with her fair clients at the Rendezvous to find out who was spending the money of Mme. ——'s husband. Then for a fat fee she could turn the information over to the wife.

In case the "other woman" happened to be one of Marthe's Rendezvous clients there arose a problem of ethics and profits. Should she tell the wife and collect from her or fool the wife and warn the husband that his wife was after him and collect from him? Helping wronged husbands and wives to "get the goods" on their erring partners might perhaps be considered in the interest of general morality, but these agencies are often used for less excusable purposes.

Business men and politicians find them convenient for digging up scandals which give them a whip-hand over their rivals, and blackmailers use them for purposes of extortion.

There was also a certain amount of "leg work" to be done by private detectives and in organizing that end of the business she availed herself of the valuable friendship of Faralieq, who by this time had opened a private detective agency of his own, though not on quite the same lines.

Marthe now began to make money very fast and became such an important channel of shady information that the police sent a man to her now to keep her books in such a manner that all her secrets would be available to them at a glance. The first two men who came to do this were coaxed out of the employ of the French Surete and into Marthe's. Thus she had two experts who knew how to fix her books the way she wanted them and yet avoid trouble with the authorities.

Marthe Dalbane was therefore safe from everyone and on the road to becoming a very rich woman. She no longer had need for admirers, she was dropping out of the public eye and in time people would have forgotten about the "Death Flower." Her troubles should have been over forever.

But once a gold-digger, always a gold-digger. No matter how much money a woman may make in business there is bound to be some effort, worry or responsibility connected with it, and if she has once had gold tossed in her lap by admirers, she is bound to yearn for those easy-money days again. Besides this, Marthe was still cursed by the drug habit. Drug addicts are capable of fitful bursts of energy, but to keep regular hours and plan steadily and sanely six days a week is almost impossible for them.

Therefore, one evil day, when the richest and most influential nobleman she had ever met, dropped into the information office, Marthe could not resist the temptation. She forgot she was a business woman and became the gold-digger. To her delight, she saw symptoms in the great man indicating that her eyes had not lost their lure. It was a fatal day for both of them.

It was the Prince Leon Radziwill, whose mysteri-

"One evening Prince Radziwill was strolling by moonlight on the Condamine, at the foot of the rock of Monaco, in the company of Maud Loty, the actress, to whom he was paying court at the time.

"The pair had reached the spot under the 'Little Bridge' when a sound overhead caused them to look up. They saw a woman crawl over the parapet and throw herself into the air. Her corpse landed at their feet. Mlle. Loty could never receive the Prince again. She lay in brain fever at the Hotel de Paris for three days, and recovered with a horror of Monte Carlo and of the Prince. 'He walks on a pavement of corpses and gold,' she declared."

The Story of a World Menaced by a Strange Power

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

HENRY GRAHAM is engaged to Evelyn Wynyard, ward of his uncle, Olive Wynyard, Chancellor of the Exchequer. At the Chancellor's he meets Count de Reineville, a mysterious Frenchman of considerable reputation as an amateur scientist. Graham is struck by the unnatural appearance of the Count, and notices an indefinable feeling of uneasiness while in his presence.

The Dictators, a secret society in possession of a newly-discovered force capable of destroying the world, demand a ransom of £100,000,000 from the Government. When this is refused they blow up several blocks around Charing Cross Station with an explosive that makes no sound and the ruins rapidly disintegrate into gray ashes as though consumed by some fiercely-biting acid. The Dictators issue a public ultimatum demanding that the ransom be paid immediately or they will blow up London.

De Reineville offers Wynyard his chateau in Normandy as a refuge until the danger is over. Wynyard accepts for his ward, and Evelyn, accompanied by Cynthia Beachcroft and Graham, go aboard the Count's palatial yacht. At sea the yacht's captain, Popinot, informs them that they are headed not for France, but for the Island, off the Norwegian coast, where the Count has a castle.

A Substance Resembling the Palest Blue Flame Hovered Over the Ancient Man.

At his office in London Wynyard, who seems to be under the influence of a strange spell, drinks an amber-colored liquid from a small flask of tinted green glass. Undecided as to whether or not he should arrest de Reineville as a suspicious character, Stephen Gotto, international authority on Anarchist outrages, goes to the Count's apartment, where he, too, drinks of the amber-colored liquid. Wynyard arrives and announces that the Government has surrendered to the Dictators. At the Count's suggestion the three take a special train to Hull, where a fast steamship, the Malvolio, chartered by de Reineville, awaits them.

The party on the yacht arrives off the Island. Popinot serves them with the amber-colored liquid, called Creme de Diable, which is only tasted by those to whom the Count offers it. It produces a feeling of veneration for de Reineville. Graham falls into a hypnotic trance.

That night the Malvolio, steaming without lights, enters the harbor and is sunk in a collision with a German warship. Wynyard and Gotto, also in a strange trance, are rescued and de Reineville is picked up apparently dead. The latter's countenance is discovered to be a mask built up over a face of incredible age. Thousands of strange creatures swim out for the body of the Count.

A British battleship arrives in search of Wynyard and the two vessels shell the Island.

CHAPTER XXV.

Narrative of Miss Beachcroft—V.

I THINK that the German captain and I had already shared so much of surprise between us since our first unceremonious meeting, that something of the faculty had been taken out of us, but we were rendered speechless by Commander Leyland's calm proposal. We stood staring at him, both feeling that the occasion was too great for words. He looked at us—a little longer at me than at the captain—and began to laugh.

"Come!" he said, "that's what I mean, really. I do not believe there is a living thing left on that Island—anyhow, I'm going to make sure. I shall take a well-armed boat's crew ashore—will you, too, take one, sir?"

The German captain's face was full of admiration.

"You are a very brave man!" he exclaimed. "But, ach Gott!—you did not see what we saw. If you had seen those things with human faces and the beasts' bodies—if you had seen the yacht crumple up just like the ash of a cigar—eh? is it a wise thing to do?"

"We've raked that Island pretty well," said Leyland. "I've just examined it carefully—there's literally not one stone standing on another in that castle or whatever it is. I don't think there's any danger. However, it's my duty to go ashore and see what there is to be seen. Mind, I've no desire to drag you into danger."

The German's face flushed, and he nodded his head several times.

"I will take a boat's crew also," he said, with emphasis. "I will go in person—England and Germany, eh? I will pick my men, and they shall be well armed," and he turned away to confer with his officers.

I looked at Commander Leyland. He was looking at me.

"I want you to do me a favor," I said. "I want—"

"Of course I will!" he began eagerly. "What is—?"

"Yes," I said, interrupting him. "You had better hear what it is before you promise that you will do it. I want you to take me with you!"

His face lengthened by half its normal length, and he drew a yard away from me.

"What!" he exclaimed. "To the Island?"

"Yes," I said. "Certainly—to the Island. You see, I have seen so much of these terrible events that I want to know all I can of them and their cause. I think—in fact, I am sure—you will find some strange things on that Island. I want to go, and I—I—don't want to go with our Teutonic friend here. I—want to go—with you. Will you take me—Commander Leyland?"

I kept my eyes on his—save when he would look away—all the time I was making this request in my most persuasive manner, and I never saw a man, especially a big, bronzed, handsome seaman, look so embarrassed or bothered in all my life. When I had finished I waited for an answer. He fidgeted about—he actually stood first on one leg, then on the other, like a schoolboy, and he kept his eyes averted. I persevered in my request.

"There is no danger, you know," I said, persuasively. "You said there wasn't." I saw him start, guiltily. "Will you take me with you—Commander?"

Then he turned on me with a look.

"No!" he roared. "No—I—I'm blamed if I will! And look here, Miss Beachcroft, if you try to persuade that German chap to take you with him I—I—I'll exert my authority over you as a British subject, and I'll have you clapped in irons. Look here," he continued in milder fashion, "can't you see that that Island's no place for a woman after the awful grueling we've given it? Come, now, go to Miss Wynyard in the cabin, and stay there till we come back."

I faced him once more.

"Will you take me?" I said again.

"Not if you were the Queen of Sheba herself!" he said quietly. "There, be a sensible girl, and go away. Leave men to do men's work."

And he put me calmly aside, as if I had been a broomstick, and went striding off to the German captain. In a few minutes he went over the side and back to the Avenger. I turned into the cabin, got into an easy chair—and began to cry for sheer vexation of spirit. I had so much wanted to see what there was on that Island, and I had asked that odious man to take me there in such persuasive fashion—and he had threatened to clap me in irons. And so—I cried.

In a moment Evelyn's arms were round me.

"Cynthia! what is it? You're ill—over-wrought, worn-out—all this has been too much for you," she began, in the customary sympathetic way. "Let me get you something from the doctor."

"No! No!" I said. "There, I'm all right again, Evie. I'm neither over-wrought or over-worn. Commander Leyland has just threatened to have me put in irons—that's all."

"You!—put in irons? Cynthia! But why?"

"Because I wanted—and threatened—to go on the Island! They're going to see what is on that Island and I wanted to go, too. Never mind—I'll pay him out yet."

"But, Cynthia—isn't that awfully dangerous? Are they really going—suppose they never return?"

Then, of course, we shall never see them any more," I said. "And as that's quite on the cards, perhaps we'd better go on deck and see the last of them."

She followed me on deck, somewhat mystified at my strange behavior, and we went over to the side and looked towards the Island. Since the bombardment had finished both ships had steamed closer in, and were now almost near the spot where the President Ebert and the Malvolio had collided—or, rather, where the former had cut the other completely in two—the previous evening. It would not have surprised me if we had suddenly found ourselves crumbling into ashes, or seen the Avenger doing likewise, or if the two boats now being rapidly pulled toward the landing stage had disappeared into air or water. Nothing happened, however, to ships or boats, and we saw the armed crews of the latter land, and, headed by their officers, go marching towards the ruins of the castle.

We saw the two boats' crews disappear amongst the ruins of the castle, and suddenly we heard the sharp rattle of musketry. At first it was quick and continuous, then it dropped away to a single shot at long intervals; a deep silence followed. It seemed to be some time yet before we saw the men coming down to the boats again. They came in a compact body. English mingling with German, and it seemed to me that they were guarding something in their midst. One of the officers brought his glasses to bear upon them, and presently exclaimed that they had a prisoner. As they came to the water's edge we saw them lift something into one of the boats; then the men embarked and the boats were pulled rapidly back to the ships. As they drew nearer we saw that both boats were heading for us, and presently the English boat shot ahead of the other and came on at great speed. As it came under our side we saw that Eustace Wynyard was in it, and that Commander Leyland was not to be seen. He was not in that boat at any rate. I strained my eyes toward the other, and at last saw him with the German captain. They and several men seemed to be guarding something that sat or lay in the stern.

Eustace Wynyard came on board in what appeared to be a great hurry. He made immediately for us. I noticed that he was very pale and that he looked as a man who has just seen unpleasant things.

"Miss Beachcroft and Evelyn," he said hastily, looking from me to his cousin, "I am charged with the duty of attending you to your cabin. Will you come, please, at once?"

"Certainly," I replied. "Are we to be locked up?"

He made no answer, but preceded us to the cabin which the German captain had graciously set apart for us. He bowed us both inside with great politeness, and followed us with all the dignity of a youthful naval officer. Once inside, he locked the door, put the key in his pocket and threw away his grandeur. He sank down on a lounge and turned white to his lips.

"Eustace," I said, "what did you see? What is it that you've brought on board?"

He mixed himself some brandy and water, pulled out a cigarette case from some mysterious corner of his uniform and lit a cigarette before he spoke.

"As to what we saw," he said slowly, "I can't—at least, I won't—tell you. I shall dream about it. As to what we brought on board—well, there's no harm in telling you that. It's an old man. Old! I should say he was living when the Pyramids were mere bricks. He's the very oldest looking thing I ever sat eyes on. We found him sitting amongst the ruins, just like a statue or a mummy — yes, a mummy's more like it."

"Eustace," I said, "what were the men shooting at?"

"Cats," he said promptly. "Awful lots of cats about that place—Leyland thought we'd better kill 'em off."

"You invented that en route, no doubt. Why didn't you think of dogs, eh? Or, Eustace, why didn't you think of something like dogs with human faces, and—"

"Look here!" he said, suddenly sitting down. "Don't! If you'd seen what I've seen, you'd feel bad. I can't talk of it. If Leyland likes to tell you, let him—I wish him joy of it. But I won't, not even for you."

"Leave him alone, Cynthia," said Evelyn. "Don't you see his nerves are unstrung?"

"Pooh!" I said. "Who ever heard of a midshipman having nerves? You're a midshipman, aren't you, Eustace?"

"I'm a lieutenant of exactly two years' standing, if you care to know," he answered, "and you may tease as much as you like, but you don't get any more out of me, nor the key either until Leyland comes."

"Well, here he is, or somebody else," I said as a knock came at the door. "So open it, quick."

"Right-oh!" said he, and took care to finish his brandy-and-water. "Now then—try the next man."

He strode to the door and unlocked it. Leyland entered hastily. Man-like, his eyes sought the liquor-case. I think he looked at it before he looked at—me. "There, we are back, you see!" he said. "Stay, Wynard. Don't go. Give me a drink, there's a good boy." He sat down and wiped his forehead. "Phew!" that was warm work. Miss. Beachcroft and Miss Wynyard, I want your assistance. There can be no doubt that yonder Island was the headquarters of the Dictators, and that the man de Reineville was either one of them or their active agent. We have found one living man on that Island—a man so old that I dare not guess how old he may be—and we purpose to examine him presently. I should like to have present as many witnesses of our own nationality as we can get, and I have sent for two more of my officers. Do you—would you—mind being present, too?"

"I should like it," I said.

"If you think it necessary, Commander Leyland," said Evelyn.

"Well, it is wise to have as much publicity as possible," he said. "Then I will send for you when we are ready. Wynyard, stay with your cousin and Miss Beachcroft until then."

He went away, and for half an hour we remained in custody, of Eustace, alternately teasing and scolding him. At last came a message for us. I felt a decided catching at the heart as we rose to go, and Evelyn turned pale. Eustace stopped us at the door.

"I say," he said, kindly, "pull yourselves together—you've never seen anything like this man in your life."

I felt a sense of indescribable awe, not unmixed with horror and fascination, as my glance fell on this man. He sat in an elbow chair, his head slightly bent forward, his eyes cast down, his hands folded passively on his knees, his whole attitude one of absolute resignation. He wore garments of a dead gray hue, cut something after the fashion of those of the Chinese, and they hung upon his shrunken figure as the drapery hangs upon a skeleton. A species of pointed cowl half covered his head and framed his face. That face! I wonder if any of us had ever dreamed of seeing such a suggestion of awful, mysterious age! His forehead was vast and noble in its proportions, the eyes large and well set, the nose and jaw prominent, but there appeared to be no flesh beneath the skin, and that hung in folds and wrinkles and seams and was of a curious gray tint that seemed to have had all brighter color bleached or dried out of it. Of that gray tint, too, were the hands, long, and thin, which rested on the old man's knees in perfect quiescence. Never have I seen anything so absolutely suggestive of death, of the utter obsession of all the faculties of life in the grayness of death as I saw in this man, who for all the signs of life he gave might have been a thing long dead.

But as we watched him in amazement the man's sunken and withered eyelids were raised, and his glance fell upon the two officers who sat as it were in judgment upon him. The effect was terrible, weird, frightening. I felt Evelyn start, and her hand instinctively sought mine. For just as the awful grayness of the face and hands suggested death, so the unutterable brilliance of the eyes suggested life—life such as we had never seen before. The light of the man's eyes seemed to shine from somewhere far back in his brain, and it shone clearly and steadily. I heard the German doctor mutter an exclamation, and I glanced at the two captains and saw they were not altogether unmoved. And then suddenly the old man spoke, and his voice was even more soul-affrighting than his face or his eyes. It was a voice out of which everything had been driven that was suggestive of human passion, and it sounded very far off, and yet clear and distinct. His lips scarcely moved as he spoke, and the only expression in his face was that produced by the slight moving of mouth and jaw. It was only by watching him closely, indeed, that one could see that he was speaking—otherwise one had thought that the clear, passionless voice came from him by some other method than ordinary mortals use.

"You would speak with me?" he said.

It was a positive relief when

Its economy is due to its flat cells

WHEN we invented the Eveready Layerbilt "B" Battery No. 486 we squared the circle, so to speak. Instead of cylindrical cells, this remarkable battery contains flat cells. The flat construction means that each block of active materials presents the greatest possible surface to the other blocks of materials on each side of it. The chemicals can act on each other with more freedom than in the cylindrical type of cell. These new flat cells actually are the most efficient dry cells ever made for "B" battery use. No other battery is made like it.

The result is that the Eveready Layerbilt is the longest lasting of all the Eveready "B" Batteries, and therefore the most economical, convenient and satisfactory. Made for use on modern receivers. It will pay you to insist on the Eveready Layerbilt.

The Story of a Modern Diana and a Search for the Treasure of Ancient Carthage

"I accept the millionth chance," said Casgrain, "but, Mademoiselle, I am safe."

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

VERE CRAIG, something of a modern Diana, must raise $7,500 to pay a debt incurred by the extravagance of her younger sister, Lois. She cannot ask her father, a retired colonel, for the money and the only other possibility is a trust fund of $10,000 she is to receive when she marries. Vere meets Michael Feverill, an explorer, who is about to leave for Africa, never to return. In desperation she asks Feverill to marry her.

Realizing that the girl is in trouble, Feverill agrees, and they are secretly married an hour before he sails in search of the treasure of ancient Carthage. He leaves Vere his signet ring and a letter to his solicitors that will enable her to secure a divorce whenever she wishes.

Vere returns home to tell her sister that she has the money. Lois rushes in with the news that she has just won $8,250 on a bet placed several weeks previously on Crossbow for the Royal Hunt Cup. Lois can now pay back the money herself and Vere's marriage has been a useless sacrifice. The pain caused by the realization that she has done Feverill a great injustice keeps the young explorer constantly in Vere's mind and makes her more human, more sympathetic and doubly attractive.

In Algiers Feverill goes to the house of his friend, El Hadji, whom he tells of his plan to hunt the treasure of Carthage, which he believes lies hidden somewhere in the desert. The Arab shows him an ancient Roman gold piece that came to him from Largah, near the place where Feverill believes the treasure to be. El Hadji warns him of the extreme danger and then disguises the Englishman as a Berber, and gives him a letter to El Dhid in the oasis of El Harib, where he can learn the desert speech. Feverill now El Nemir, the Panther—arrives at the home of El Dhid and meets the latter's daughter, Rezala, a beautiful child of the desert. Upon the girl's breast he recognizes another gold piece from the treasure of Carthage.

In England, meanwhile, Vere's friends, the Pollitts, plan a trip to Africa to inspect a newly discovered iron deposit, and Vere decides to accompany them, paying for the trip with the trust fund she received on the day of the marriage.

Vere and the Pollitts arrive in Africa and are met by Jules Casgrain, cultured French engineer and discoverer of the iron deposit, who hopes to interest Pollitt in investing. On the way to the iron mountain Vere is much attracted to the charming Frenchman. The night they reach it he tells Vere he loves her and asks her to marry him. She tells him that she is not free. The party plan a tour in the desert.

Feverill and Rezala are falling in love. She tells him of her dream about their finding the treasure, describing its hiding place accurately, and suggests that she, her father and El Nemir go in search of it. In his excitement El Nemir blurts out his acceptance in English.

Rezala, all the more eager to win him, promises to keep his secret. They start their search and at El Feija meet the Pollitt party.

CHAPTER XIX.

FEVERILL was thinking about Casgrain. No object in putting himself in a worse light than necessary, so it would be better to let that affair take its natural course to its natural end. They would doubtless as Rezala had said, be very happy together. This meant that Vere, if she had not done so already, would forthwith send the letter to his solicitors—there would be much talk in Dorset—a little in London—and the thing would die out.

He was glad that he liked what he had seen of Casgrain from behind his Berber haik, and would like him for a friend later on. Why not? Stranger things happened. And perhaps he and Casgrain and Vere and Rezala would together find the treasure of Carthage.

That, inevitably, set up another train of thought, and, with another glance at the faintly discernible figures, he went back to the tent of El Dhid, and lay down in his own corner. He had never even spoken to Rezala in that tent, whereat El Dhid marvelled greatly.

Casgrain saw him go. As a man of the world, he had put his own interpretation on this affair. The girl was very unusual, and the tall Berber in luck. But the fact that he and Vere were to travel with them was rather important. It introduced an element that he welcomed. It had a special significance.

Casgrain was in love, and greatly puzzled. He made the fine distinction between loving and being in love—the one an epoch, the other a phase—but in this case he suspected that the two had run together. Also it was quite true that never before had he asked a woman to marry him. That was because his Gallic restlessness made it impossible to contemplate seeing the face of the same woman across the table every day.

But about Vere he felt differently, and was quite ready to see hers, though he sometimes asked himself if he could love any woman as deeply as he loved his work.

How strange were these English, he reflected. How cool-blooded! And, being cool-blooded, how were they roused? And what was this kind of woman like when awakened to full response? He greatly desired to know this, being fully aware of his own emotional capacity. It hurt sometimes, for all his gaiety.

"This desert trip"—Vere was saying—" tell me something about it."

"It is always the same—heat by day and the sun striking up from the sand into your eyes—by night a blessed coolness—the trail sometimes so hard to see—the lurching of the camel. What else can there be—except the mirage on the horizon?"

"I'd like to see that."

"Mademoiselle, it is strange, but I saw one by night not long ago."

"By night, is that possible?"

"I saw it on a mountain of iron. It was very beautiful, but as I approached it dissolved. They always do."

"You have not forgiven me yet?" she murmured.

"With all my heart. I wait to offer more than that. You say you are not free. Is it that something remains to be done to secure freedom? And, if so, you will do it—for me?"

It was a fair question, and too straight to sidestep the second time. The ironical truth remained that she had come to Africa to look for a husband. Well! She avoided the eyes that she knew were searching her face, and looked thoughtfully toward the low-pitched ten of El Dhid.

It was all strange, unreal, disjointed. Things happened here as assuredly they could have happened nowhere else. How find her husband in this prodigious waste? That being impossible, she saw herself the creature of new conditions and circumstances. She could love Casgrain. That was undoubted. But she must be just to Feverill. This necessity immediately raised the question of his letter. What was in it?

"I told you that I was not free," she said very gently.

He nodded, perceiving that there was more to come.

"I want to speak of that now. I owe it to you. I can set myself free when I get back to England, but in doing it I must be fair to a man who has done everything for me—everything."

Casgrain, at first completely bewildered, saw a little light.

"Divorce?"

She put her hand on his arm. "Do not breathe it to anyone! The Pollitts do not know, nor even my own father and sister. But"—she faltered—"on account of what you have said, I must tell you."

He made a swift gesture, his brain at work, darting hither and thither, trying to ferret out why she should divorce a man who had done everything for her. What was everything?

"We were married last June," she went on, wondering at the sound of her own voice, "in a Registrar's office. Immediately after that we walked to the station, and he went away—to Africa. I have not seen him since."

Casgrain gave a sharp exclamation, then checked himself.

"There was only that civil form of marriage, and we agreed that it created no obligations on either side." She added this in a low tone, realizing that it sounded the most cold-blooded thing imaginable.

"There was, perhaps, some legal reason?" He tried to speak calmly. "It was very important, perhaps that this should take place, important for you both?"

"It did not concern him at all, only me. He—he married me to help me." She came out with this in a burst, feeling that the floodgates were down at last, and her soul was being purged of its pent-up poison.

Casgrain stared at her. One remote reason suggested itself, but immediately he cast that out. The girl was too proud, too high-bred. Her eyes now met his unflinchingly, as they had never met before. There had never been any surrender here. Then he became aware that he must step very carefully at this point.

"Might I know this man's name?" He paused. "I should like to meet and thank him."

She nearly broke down at that, and motioned into the starlit desert. "I wish you could bring him here—now. He'd understand. I've only met him twice, but he understood each time. And I can't tell you his name yet. I must be fair—absolutely. When he went away he gave me a letter which he says will liberate me when I wish. It's for his solicitors, and he did not tell me what's in it. But I don't want to use it if it would hurt him. You see," she added wistfully, "I've hurt him enough already."

Casgrain respected her all the more. Good to know a woman who wanted to be fair to men. Too many of the other kind. So he instantly forgave her for that night on the iron mountain. Also he was now glad of that night, because it showed how human she was. Clear sailing — that was what she wanted.

"Could you just think of me for a moment as being another man who desires to help you—if he can. This one did it by marriage. I am even more anxious to do it by wiping out that marriage. Look at it this way. You have no idea where he went in Africa—or why?"

"All I know is that it was on a dangerous venture, and his best friend, the one who knows all about it, fears he may never come back. I wrote to catch him in Algiers, but——"

"To ask him to return?" put Casgrain quickly.

"No; just to tell him how sorry I was for my part of it."

A dangerous venture! Casgrain glanced at the towering mass of the Jebel Ban, at El Felia, whose untamed population was now hidden behind the mud walls that peered through the fronded palms at the unchartered desert stretching under the stars eastward toward Lybia and southward toward the jungle bordered Niger. There was danger enough here, even if a man did not come to look for it, and if that was the sort of journey this girl's unwanted husband had undertaken——! Then, like a flash, occurred a possible solution. He loved her, and, seeing that it was hopeless, had taken the shortest way out.

"There was no sentiment in this matter on either side?"

"Only on my part—for one I wanted to serve."

That told him very little more, but it was something to think about.

"You do not think it possible that, in spite of everything, he loves you now, today?" Casgrain was trying very hard to be fair to her as she had to him.

"He had only seen me once before," she said. "And he asked nothing—from any woman. He told me that."

There was something about this ace of the unknown that struck Casgrain very forcibly. It compelled a sort of grudging admiration, first because he could not have done it himself, and again in the mere fact that any man had been able to marry a girl like this—and demand nothing. That seemed almost more than human.

"And he was not the kind you would have liked to marry and live with? If it sounds an impertinence that I ask this, please remember that you told me he had done everything for you."

"I did not want to marry any man—then," she said in a half whisper.

This—for it could be only her way of telling him that she loved him—set his heart beating fast. What had changed her? Africa? He gave way to a sudden insupportable longing, then, animated by what seemed an absurd yet natural regard for the unknown husband, set guard over his emotions.

"So you see," she went on, looking at him wistfully, "you must not press me too far. While it lasts I must be loyal to what I undertook myself."

"And if before you go back to England you were to find this man, against which—" here he made an expressive gesture—"against which there are a million chances to one, and he told you that in spite of what was said before he now loved you and wanted you—what then?"

Vere lifted her head, an odd look in her eyes.

"A millionth chance?"

"If as much as that. We are in Africa."

"What would a man rightly expect me to do — remembering everything?" she asked, speaking with almost painful slowness. "What would you expect?"

Casgrain smiled brilliantly, and, staring into the desert nodded as though to himself. "A fair question and I am quick to answer. I would expect you to come. If it happens this time, I accept the millionth chance. But, madmoiselle, I am safe."

CHAPTER XX.

At mid-morning there rose a little cloud of dust toward the Springs of Dra, and out of the cloud presently appeared eight camels, of which six were riderless. The two drivers were Nomads, wild-looking, black-eyed men, of whom Massoud with many gestures said that they were wise in all the ways of the desert, and as honest as the Prophet himself. Casgrain, regarding them closely, was a little uncertain of this, but felt more comfortable when El Dhid, who must be no fool in such matters, took these hard-faced strangers for granted.

Mrs. Pollitt was, at first, rather frightened; but, assuring herself that nowadays brigandage only happened in books, hooked her arm into Vere's, and with fascinated interest watched the loading of the complaining and disgruntled camels. This was the real thing. When the time came she took a furtive glance at the slit nose and wicked eye of her own beast, and climbed into the heavy wooden saddle that of itself seemed sufficient load for anything on four legs. Vere effected liason with her own steed, the men followed with shouts of laughter from Pollitt, and simultaneously the party of El Dhid prepared for the trail. It seemed to Vere that in comparison with themselves their needs were low and light, and she noted the complete ease of Rezala, whose adjar now veiled her face from the blazing sun. It took but a moment to fabricate something of the same sort to save the tip of her own nose.

Mrs. Pollitt, recovering from the dislocating shock when the big hairy body beneath her straightened its doubled knees, gave a gasp of relief.

"Bob, you may not know it, but I'm undergoing a change into something new and strange, so don't be surprised at anything I do after this. What's our home address in case I forget it?"

Vere laughed. "I believe it is going to make a difference."

"It has already. Do you get seasick on a camel—is that why it's called the ship of the desert? And I wish that nice Arab man—the ugly one—could talk English or French—I mean Mr.—Mr. What's his name?"

"El Nemir," said Casgrain looking round.

His voice carried and the man, who was close by, glanced up enquiringly.

"Ask him if he won't ride with us—if the girl will let him. I want an Arab escort—a real live one."

Casgrain asked. The man spoke to Rezala, who looked over her shoulder and muttered something with a toss of her head. At this Mrs. Pollitt smiled.

"Did you see that, Vere? Same old story; she thinks you're cutting her out and is simply green with jealousy in spite of her natural color. I wish I could flirt with him. Mr. Casgrain, is he coming?"

Casgrain nodded and El Nemir, wheeling his camel, wedged in between the two. At this moment El Dhid made a clicking sound, and Vere drew a long breath of satisfaction.

"Who would have dreamed it a month ago!"

"I know, and hardly believe it myself yet; but if you came to Africa to find a husband I don't know that its going to help you much. And, Vere, don't turn your head, but when he's not looking at you—as he is now—just notice those eyes. They're absolutely intelligent—no other word for it."

"I know—I noticed it at once."

"How would you feel if in the middle of the night you found a brown hand over your mouth and he carried you off to his desert home? He looks quite capable, if you ask me."

Vere laughed. "I don't think I'd go."

"Go!—you'd be so thrilled—at least I would— that I couldn't utter a sound. But I suppose he'd catch it from that girl."

"There's not much doubt about that."

"Well, since it doesn't appeal to you, what about your engineer? Decided yet?"

"No, nothing is decided. How does your camel feel?"

"I don't believe he feels anything. I'm doing it all. And I'll never laugh again at the people who take sixpenny rides in the Zoo. I say, Vere?"

"Yes?"

"Nothing more to tell me? You're frightfuly uncommunicative."

"Not before we get back."

"Is he coming back with us?"

Vere smiled reflectively. "He seems to want to."

"Then that tells me all I need at the moment. I think you'll be tremendously happy, and may I come out once a year?"

"Where to?" parried Vere.

Mrs. Pollitt sniffed. "My dear, you cannot sidestep much longer. Bob and I were talking while you two were having that moonlight stroll last night. You looked too romantic. Bob's all for it, and we want you to be married from our house if your father will agree. Yours won't hold half your friends. Now's your chance—the dark gentleman between us—he's not looking!"

Vere took a swift glance. The eyes of El Nemir seemed very strange, being in one second grim, and in the next full of apparent amusement. The lower part of his face was covered, but she could make out a short and rather blunt nose and big square chin. Then, of a sudden, he turned, and the eyes met hers.

They made her a little dizzy, so that she clutched the lurching saddle with both hands. Feverill was dead—and recalled to earth in the guise of an Arab!

This conception, bizarre though it was, had a strangely silencing effect. Nothing could be further from her mind than the truth, but as a mirage takes on the swimming semblance of reality so did this man's eyes suggest that in some mysterious fashion he had been sent to remind her of the past. Everything that was light and amusing died on her lips, and she gave an involuntary exclamation.

"What's the matter, Vere?" demanded Mrs. Pollitt curiously. "You look as though you'd seen a ghost."

"Nothing—except that this saddle isn't very comfortable."

"The same here, and its going to be worse before night. And we can't have our meals off the mantelpiece either."

The man who called himself El Nemir restrained a chuckle, and stared straight ahead, his expression as blank as ever. He was sure of one thing. Situations like this could not last long, could never be repeated, and were rapidly drawing in to the inevitable finality. The fantastic had solidified into fact. He was riding beside his wife! In front was the girl who expected to marry him! And talking fluently to the girl was Casgrain whom Vere expected to marry. It was a square—not a triangle.

No talk being expected from him, he dropped a little back, and occupied his silence with swift unobserved glances at his wife. Her attitude was thoughtful, and, obviously, her imagination was traveling far. Her profile masked by the improvised veil that left uncovered only her large blue eyes, looked fine and delicate under its shroud, and her slim body swayed rythmically to the long, loose strides of her camel.

He found himself contrasting her with Rezala, and though he admitted that this was not fair, the contrast persisted. Different breeds, these two, one the sheer blossom of civilization, the other the flaming passion flower of the South. Quite absurdly he wondered whether it would not be possible to blend them, producing a composite woman with as much fire as gentleness, as much passion as pride.

And now that the desert had purged him of his old grudge against the world, and women in particular, it seemed strange that he had ever been able to turn his back on this proud and lovely being who was his wife. Agreements were agreements, but instinct was deeper than any given bond. What paralysis had dulled his instincts? He felt no love as yet, only the wonder at not feeling—which is itself so often the prelude of love. It was as though with a film over his eyes he had in England seen but dimly—as though he had but touched her with a gloved hand, and the warmth and thrill of her life therefore escaped him. Now there was no film, no glove.

Again he yielded to that odd sensation about Casgrain. Not jealousy as yet, but perilously near it; not an antipathy — the man being too much the right sort for that—but a growing surprise that he should have aspired to Vere. So, as it stood, the thing lay between himself and Casgrain. At this he nodded with grim contentment.

The treasure of Carthage, guarded for so many torrid centuries by the red ramparts of the Jebel Ban? No one of them could now privately find it. They were all bound up in this venture, directed by the dream of Rezala, and brought together like wandering ants, head-first, in a wrinkle of a windblown dune.

And what would Dartrey say to this, Dartrey whom Vere had certainly met and questioned? How much or how little had his friend said? He had never written to Dartrey, but decided that the best and surest road to success was to lose himself as completely as possible. Therefore he had never gone to Largah, but stopped short at El Harib.

He wondered if he should have written to Vere from Algiers as a matter of courtesy—or Vere to himself. But she could not—and find him. And the letter to his solicitors—perhaps that had been delivered, and he was in the process of being put aside. A jumble set up in his brain. He hoped she had not done it yet. He would like to speak to her about it, just once, after Rezala's dream was either proved or disproved. He glanced at Rezala. She seemed quite happy, and was talking fast, more interested every moment.

And Rezala, for her part, had made a discovery that intrigued her immensely. Her eyes seemed just as effective on this Roumi as on El Nemir and the eligibles of El Harib. This one was distinctly better looking, and not only did he speak Arabic nearly as well as El Nemir, but—and this appealed to her very much—he expressed himself with a very infectious gaiety. As a result, and while the palms of El Felja could still be seen like a low green island on the horizon, she began to flirt with a primitive directness that left no room for misunderstanding.

She liked this second Roumi almost as well, if not quite as well, as the first. She could indeed learn to love him very easily, and the fact that he was going to marry the woman with gold hair piqued her all the more. El Nemir was riding beside that woman now. This made Rezala resentful, and the consequence was that she turned on Casgrain a battery of dark eyes that no man could face and remain entirely unstirred.

"How many wives have you?"

"None," he said regretfully.

"Then she—" Rezala jerked her head toward Vere—"she will be the first?"

"The very first."

"Will you take any more afterwards? In El Harib some men have four, which is all the Prophet allows."

"I couldn't afford that many," he grinned. "Four wives are the luxury of a rich man, whereby he is often made poor before long."

But doesn't one wife get very tired having to do all the work—which is what the old ones are for in El Harib?"

"Mine won't have to do any work if she doesn't want to."

This was a new idea, and Rezala became more interested every minute. In spite of what he said, this man must be rich.

"But when you are weary of her—what then? Can you sell her?"

"Not exactly—and I don't expect to get weary. Do you think El Nemir will take another wife by and by?"

"Perhaps, when I get ugly."

She said this with a laugh, and, loosening her veil, sent him a challenging look. Not in any woman of the desert had he seen so perfect a face as this. The eyes, large and liquid like those of the gazelle itself, held all the quick responsive fire of her race. Her body, even in the folds of her cloak, could be seen to be exquisitely moulded, and the small brown hand resting on the saddle was of delicate shape, with tapering fingers and small almond-shaped nails. And Rezala had been wise enough never to use henna.

Casgrain found himself imagining her in a modern house built somewhere in his much loved Africa, running about on silent sandalled feet, dressed in flashing native silks, a lovely olive-skinned chatelaine for any man. His fancy went on, picturing her learning English and French, her delight in acquiring the things other women had, the vision she would make curled up on a divan with the loose net sleeves falling away from her soft smooth arms and the little shadowed curves beneath her rounded throat. And she would be content with such small things, so

Your teeth feel so clean, your mouth so fresh, you want to smile

Your mouth sweet·· your teeth protected

HOW few of us after our early youth can be proud of unimpaired teeth, confident of a clean healthy mouth!

A great medical authority found a slowing up of the mouth fluids to be the great cause of modern tooth trouble. And so he devised the famous formula of Pebeco.

Taste Pebeco. Instantly its salty tang wakens the mouth fluids. Effectually they wash away debris, sweeten breath, neutralize acids that cause decay.

For hours your mouth stays dewy, sweet, protected through the day by the morning brushing with Pebeco, made safe for the night by the bedtime brushing.

Made by Pebeco, Inc., a division of Lehn & Fink Products Company. Sole distributors, Lehn & Fink, Inc., Bloomfield, N. J. Distributed in Canada by Lehn & Fink (Canada) Limited.

"Teeth sound . . . a feeling of freshness and cleanliness"

writes Mrs. F. C. Lord of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

I have been using Pebeco Tooth Paste for the past seventeen years. I have experimented with various other tooth pastes but in every instance I have returned to Pebeco and now I feel I could not be induced to change.

My reasons for admiring Pebeco are, first, it has kept my teeth beautifully white and sound and my gums in perfect condition; and, secondly, it imparts a feeling of freshness and cleanliness to the mouth which also assures me that my breath is sweet.

I am one who annually visits my dentist for an examination and advice and have many times been complimented by him upon the splendid condition of my teeth, the absence of tartar or any discoloration and the sound, healthy condition of my gums, all of which I attribute to Pebeco Tooth Paste.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) MRS. F. C. LORD

much less than any man would want to give her! She was too good, too rare, for any Arab, he thought. Far too rare!

"Why don't you marry a Roumi instead of El Nemir?" he asked abruptly, realizing immediately how incautious that was.

She glanced at him, and rippled into a delicious laugh.

"Could you find me a Roumi—something like yourself?"

He chuckled, "That would be very easy, if you will wait."

She laughed again, and so knowingly that he assumed she was hiding something.

"Do you read Arabic as you speak it?"

"Yes—but what is it you find so funny?"

"Then some day I will write and tell you why I marry El Nemir."

"Were it not better to tell me now?"

She shook her dainty head. "You will understand before long, and perhaps I shall see you again."

"Where?" asked Casgrain, rather mystified.

But Rezala would say no more, and became completely silent. She was a little frightened because it had been on the tip of her tongue to tell this delightful Roumi about her dream and the treasure of Carthad Hadtha. But El Nemir would not like that. And why did he stay so long beside that other woman?

El Felja finally slipped out of sight, and the caravan crawled on beneath the high dome of stainless sky. The Arabs did not talk, save to the camels; the Roumis were struck speechless with the vastness of this new setting, and there sounded only the soft thump-thud of camels' feet, the faint creak of leather straining across the saddles, and an occasional guttural word of command from the black-eyed drivers. They were crossing what looked like a wide bay of the desert, and making for the point of a low ridge that lay, barely perceptible, on the horizon.

To Vere it seemed that they hardly moved, so minute was their human presence in this immensity. In the west, the range of the Jebel Ban had lost all sharpness of outline, and stretched in purple confusion, a jumble of uncharted hills bathed in fine, thin air. To the east was a scintillating yellow sea. This, she learned, was the sand dunes, moving ridges whose smooth crests had passed to and fro for how many thousand years, driven by desert winds, ancient as time, irresistible as fate.

Casgrain had talked to her about these dunes, which they had not yet touched, and how in their midst one found sometimes a pool oasis where the top of the date palms were level with the surrounding crests, tiny centers of life where lived a family or two in the very midst of this tawny ocean—an ocean beneath which, it was believed, were buried cities of which history has no record.

CHAPTER XXI.

MRS. POLLITT was too exhausted to talk much, and her husband, a little concerned, followed her into the tent to make her comfortable. Presently Casgrain lit a cigarette, and came round to Vere. There was no fire in the camp of El Dhid, where neither he nor his daughter were visible; but El Nemir sat there smoking, a motionless figure in the dusk. A little further off were the two servants, Hussein and Ali, the two Nomad drivers, and then the camels. It might have all been arranged in a decreasing scale of intelligence.

Casgrain glanced musingly at El Nemir.

"I wonder what that fellow is thinking about. Almost any Arab will remain like that for hours at a time, no change of expression, nothing to indicate what he's feeling, his face a mask."

"In this case won't it be about his future wife?"

"You can't tell. They get into a sort of abstraction that one isn't able to follow, or interpret. I've studied them for years, but get no further. Would you like to talk to him? I'll translate."

Vere, reflecting a moment, was not quite sure. The fantastic thought inspired by this man's eyes had not left her, and she suspected that it would persist so long, at any rate, as this trip lasted.

"What could one talk to him about?" she said uncertainly. "He won't want to discuss that girl, and he seems naturally very silent."

"Ask him about his people—where he comes from—where he's going to live—anything."

"All right."

Casgrain went over, and, having perceived the man to be something of a native aristocrat, made a grave salute.

"I would like you to know the Negleez lady, and she desires to speak with you. Is it well?"

The man nodded, twitched his haik a shade higher across the bridge of his nose, and followed. Turning to Vere, he inclined his head and sat, slightly withdrawn so that only his eyes were visible. She stared at them for a moment, then gave a nervous little smile.

"It's so queer, but his eyes remind me of a man I knew."

"Berber eyes," said Casgrain, "they often look Saxon. And I wouldn't talk about him to me in his presence. These people are very quick, and observe much more than they show. He has good blood, that's evident. What shall I ask him?"

"Why not what you suggested?"

"The lady would like to know where you come from," began Casgrain, offering a cigarette.

The man turned it over in a brown hand, slipped it into the breast of his bournous, and motioned toward the north.

"From far away in the Jebel Ban." His deep voice was muffled though the haik.

"And where are you going to live?" Casgrain translated as he went on. "The lady knows nothing of this country, and would learn."

"I will live where the wisdom of Allah directs."

"And your people, your father's fathers, whence were they?"

"Some of them sleep in Palestine around Jerusalem. It does not matter much where a man takes his last sleep."

Casgrain turned to Vere with growing interest. "Do you realize what that means? This man's ancestors must have fought against the Crusaders. It is known that many Jews and Saracens left Palestine, came through Egypt and Lybia, and finally reached the Sahara and increased the old Bedouin tribes. I've seen chain armour near Tripoli that was undoubtedly Saracen."

"How strange! Do you think you can get at his real thoughts—about things in general—about life, if you like?"

"In other words his philosophy? I'll try—just wait a minute."

"The lady wants to know," he said, speaking slowly, "whether you believe that what is written is written. Can you do what you please, go where you please, love where you please? She would have you tell her what is in your mind on these things."

The grey eyes took on a sudden glint. "It is the writing of Misrah, the Persian, that in the matter of women most men are blind of one eye, and, seeing with the other only that they desire to see, fall at times into grievous error. Between the warmth of love, which is like a welcome fire when the night is cold, and the flame of desire, which consumes like the mid-day sun under Capricorn, there is a great difference. Yet few there be that discern it."

Vere was astonished when she got this. "Please! Please make him go on!"

Casgrain smiled a little. "The lady would hear more of El Misrah, so wise a man."

"There is too much to say in one night, or in many, but there is this. Women are in a multitude, all different, yet all the same. Their strength is that they are weak, and it is a mighty weakness. When they love with both body and soul it is like the sun after a cold night, and the tender grass that springs up under the rain. Like grass, it is soon over. It is also written that the breast of a woman is soft, however hard be her heart, but men, remembering the breast, forget that which it covers."

"These be strange words for one who loves."

Again the gleam in the gray eyes. "A woman is a riddle to the wise, but often read by the witless; and how few there be too proud to follow the crook of a slender finger. Thus wrote El Misrah, who in his days, many women having offered themselves, took none and therefore understood them all."

"Does this belief make for happiness in the life of man?"

"What is happiness?" asked the deep voice.

Vere, who had been given it all, word for word, felt a tightening in her breast. The man's eyes had turned toward her. Casgrain was also watching, a grave expression on his sunburned face.

"I think we've struck a desert philospher," he said in an odd tone.

She nodded speechlessly. Again that strange conception? This might have been the creed of Michael Feverill, whose bones were perhaps bleaching on the sands. It was the desert interpretation, the desert rendering of what he had said to her across the little table at Constant's a few months ago.

"What does he think comes after this?" she asked, feeling that the winds of time were breathing against her cheek.

Casgrain put it. There followed a silence during which a whisper of breeze from across the seas of sand woke an expiring glow in the tamarisk embers, and an invisible camel groaned in the gloom.

"That is beyond all wisdom, whether Arab or Persian or Roumi. Men paint pictures in their minds of that which they most desire. At one time, when the blood is hot, it is for the eternal love of women. Afterward it may be that they wish eternal freedom of women. Men are of all creatures the most strange. Yielding to thoughts that lead nowhere, they suffer when there is no need to suffer, and imagine themselves hungered though their bellies be full. Thus wrote El Misrah. Like the blind beetles their feet make a little mark in the sand, whereon the winds breathe and it is gone."

Casgrain fingered another cigarette, and put it back into its case with a snap. What a memory the man had. This grave voice had unsealed in himself thoughts too deep for words, and there was no wish on his part to probe further. His ambitions, his work, his science, all the things that travel and study and a keen active brain had done for him—what were these worth at the last reckoning when the wind breathed on the marks he had made in the sand?

He looked very soberly at Vere. In a strange way she now seemed removed—beyond him, out of reach. He had hungered for this journey with her, and now that he had it, a gray-eyed man shrouded in a bournous had lifted them out of contact with each other and bid them face the eternal verities, the unanswerable question. He, the Arab—Vere, the Saxon—himself, the Gaul—yet each of them, all of them but blind beetles crawling over the sands of time!

"Shall I say any more?" he asked in a low tone.

The signal of her lifted hand was enough. She had come into the desert full of strange desires, reaching for freedom, and assuring herself that the past was done with, the future a mirage, and only the vibrant present should be considered. Now she found this! Perhaps it was only a dream that would be dissipated with the morning sun, but she did not think so. Too deep for any dream.

It brought back Michael Feverill with a rush. This was what he might have said, said it in the same quiet way, with the same look in his deep-set eyes. It was the creed of one who asked nothing from anyone—even from women. At this came the thought of Rezala. But Rezala was the more passionate of the two. So the man must be taking her because she had offered herself, and would then move on, unruffled, to whatever fate awaited him. Rezala could never interpret a nature like his. Somehow, she was glad of that.

"Tell him," she murmured, "that I will always remember what he has said."

DON'T HAVE OLD LOOKING HANDS

Years alone do not age hands or face. Work, at home or at business, washing dishes, dampness, cold, dust and grime do damaging things to women's delicate skin and bring the fine wrinkles, chaps, red, rough, aged appearance to hands and face that but yesterday were smooth and lovely.

Your hands and skin, however, may appear as youthful and fresh as ever, regardless of the kind of work you have to do, if you will but give them the proper care. An entirely new preparation that contains a Japanese product that is simply marvelous for beautifying, whitening and softening the skin is now being put up in this country and is fast displacing the old fashioned creams, face and hand lotions. This new product is called Ice-Mint and druggists say they are having an enormous demand for it as it has proved to be the very best beautifier for not only the hands but for face, neck, arms and shoulders. Ice-Mint is sold at all druggists. Its cost is little and women everywhere are surprised at the real beauty it brings to their hands and skin wherever applied. United Sales Mfg. Co., Binghamton, N. "FOR 6 YEARS I struggled to get back my health"

Buffalo, N. Y.

"Continuously strenuous work, even in an office where the atmosphere is one of beauty and calm, can be very wearing.

"Finally I had a breakdown. My weight dropped to 101 pounds. For six years I struggled along, trying everything I knew to build myself up again—but without success.

"When at last Fleischmann's Yeast was recommended to me I grasped at the hope as a drowning person clutches at a straw. But there the comparison ends, for in less than a year the Yeast had restored me to my normal weight and brought back my health. I am now vigorous and well. And happy in my work."

Mae Hennessy

VIGOR, stamina, a cheery outlook depend largely on regular and complete elimination of food waste.

Fleischmann's Yeast is a food, as fresh as any green vegetable. It helps to keep the intestines free of poisons. Strengthens the sluggish intestinal muscles. Banishes constipation.

Your new intestinal health soon reflects itself throughout your body. Your blood clears. Your digestion improves. Your skin is freed of embarrassing eruptions.

"SOME YEARS AGO I was sick in bed for about a week. After I got up I still didn't feel my old self, so I called for the doctor. He said I hadn't got rid of all the poisons from my illness, and ordered me to eat three cakes every day of Fleischmann's Yeast. I followed the doctor's suggestion and can truthfully say that Yeast did all he said it would do. I am now entirely well."

"WHEN I GRADUATE from school I hope to become an athletic instructor. (I now hold high points in running and jumping and the highest athletic average in my class.) When I take up my instruction duties one thing you may be sure of is that I shall recommend Fleischmann's Yeast. Here is why:

"Some time ago I was bothered with severe skin eruptions, all the way up my left arm. Tonics and salves had no effect whatever. At last, seeing in a newspaper what Fleischmann's Yeast had done for many others, I began to eat it myself. In a few weeks there wasn't a blemish of any kind on my arm. This was about three years ago, but I still eat Yeast every day about mealtime, and am in the best of health."

"I began to suffer from severe indigestion caused by constipation," Mr. Devaney writes. "Being advised to try Fleischmann's Yeast, I began to eat three cakes a day. In two or three months' time I entirely overcame my constipation and stomach trouble."

Edward J. Devaney, Cincinnati, Ohio

Do this—to be energetic, well:

Eat three cakes of Fleischmann's Yeast regularly every day, one cake before each meal or between meals. Eat it plain, or dissolved in water—hot or cold—or any other way you like. For stubborn constipation drink it in a glass of hot water (not scalding) before meals and before going to bed.

Three Days of Terror

By J. S. Fletcher

Leyland's bluff, hearty, business-like English tones broke in on the silence which followed.

"Um-er-well, you see, sir," he began, "we want to know something about that Island of yours. You were the only living thing—at least, man—we could find on it, and we look to you for some explanation. You see, there have been some very strange things going on during the past few days in Europe, and we rather fancy that you and your friends on that Island have been mixed up in them. Perhaps you are not aware that a terrible outrage was committed in London the other day, through the agency of some awful force with which our scientists are not acquainted?"

"I am aware."

"You are? Well now, this morning the yacht L'Hirondelle was destroyed off your Island in precisely the same fashion. That makes things a bit—I mean to say, sir, that the fact that these two outrages appear to have been of the same nature make us suspect you. May I ask you a plain question — we wish to be as respectful to you as we ought to be to one of your venerable years, but we are only doing our duty to our respective Governments—may I ask if you are a member of the society or body calling itself the Dictators?"

"I was."

I think we all started. There was a pause. Then Leyland spoke again, and his voice assumed a new tone.

"You were?" he said. "What does that mean?"

"That the body no longer exists. Nor was it a body. It was a Trinity, whereof no unit had power without the other two units, as it is in all things. I am all that is left. Every man is mortal, whatever knowledge he possesses. Out of this earthly tabernacle all men must pass once. They are passed."

"You mean," said Leyland, "that your two colleagues are dead—killed during the bombardment?"

"They are passed."

"But you acknowledge that you and they were responsible for these outrages—that you employed this wonderful force—that you have been exerting powers upon humanity which seem to us to be superhuman——"

"The mortal cannot exercise superhuman power," said the old man.

"Well, we'll not quarrel about terms," said Leyland, who appeared distinctly pleased to know that the figure before him was that of a man. "You confess that you and your colleagues planned and executed this outrage in London, and destroyed the yacht, and intended, no doubt, to commit outrages in other capitals of Europe—"

"And of the world," interrupted the old man, very calmly.

"Ah! you admit that? Well, we would like to know what that force was."

A very, very faint sigh, the ghost of a sigh, escaped the old man's withered lips, and I thought that I saw the slightest movement of his hands as they rested on his knees.

"Do not seek for knowledge without due search for it," he said. "Not even I know that secret! It was shared in by three, and each knew his part. Of the knowledge of the two who are passed I know nothing. The work of a thousand years is at an end. So be it. It is Fate."

The German captain broke in. He was somewhat excited.

"But of these thousands of unfortunate people that you have slain, of the blood and tears, what say you?" he asked. "I saw the yacht destroyed. I saw, too, the sights on your Island. Ach Gott! what say you to that?"

"Whoever proposes to conquer, which means to regenerate, the world, thinks not of individual suffering," answered the old man. "Which of your modern generals pauses in his operations because of the weeping of the widow, or the cries of the fatherless?"

"But our modern generals do not transform men into beasts!" broke out the German. "Here are three men in my ship who—" he suddenly paused, glancing at Evelyn and me. "I tell you," he went on, "that I have three passengers who by your arts are scarcely human. What say you to that?"

The old man closed his eyes. He bent his head for a moment, almost as if he were praying. Then he raised it, and opening his eyes turned them upon the German doctor. I saw the man's face turn ghastly white as those terrible eyes fell on him, and the sweat came breaking out upon his brow and cheeks like rain.

"Your patients are fallen asleep," said the voice. "For a day they will sleep, and on the next they will be as of old. Go—see if it is not so."

The doctor went out of the cabin as if he walked in his sleep. He came back with a world of conflicting emotions depicted in his face.

"It is so," he said. "They have fallen asleep like children—it is a miracle!" The tension was becoming too great. I felt that I must scream before long. Evelyn was gripping me tightly by the hand; behind us I heard Eustace Wynyard breathing as if he had just run a hard mile. It was a relief when the clear, far-away tones of the old man's voice broke the silence.

"What more would you have of me? I would depart."

Leyland coughed, almost, if not quite, apologetically.

"Well, sir," he said. "I—you see, I'm afraid we can't quite allow that. You've been very candid, but you've admitted that you and your colleagues were responsible for these outrages, and I'm afraid that we shall have to detain you, you know. Of course, you will be treated with every consideration, and—"

The old man interrupted him.

"Thou hast no power over me," he said, and closed his eyes. It seemed to me that a sudden calm spread itself over his face.

And now I am going to write down what every person in that cabin has already sworn a solemn oath as to having witnessed. . . . As the calm deepened on the gray, fleshless face, and at length fell into a deep serenity, we saw a substance resembling the palest blue flame that shines about a light gradually assume the shape of a figure, enveloping that of the ancient man and hovering above it, wrapping it about and hiding it as in a mantle. As gradually as it came it disappeared, and there was revealed to us the figure in the gray robes, still seated as before . . . and as I looked at it I knew that I was looking, not on the semblance, but on the reality of death.

(Miss Beachcroft's account of these doings was afterwards countersigned by several of her fellow-witnesses.)

CHAPTER XXVI.

By Way of Epilogue.

IT was three years after the events dealt with in foregoing portions of this book that I came back to England after a prolonged absence in the South Sea Islands, and was enabled to renew my acquaintance with my old friends. Amongst them there was no one whom I was more pleased to see again than Miss Beachcroft, and my pleasure was all the greater because I felt no pang or regret when I found that she was the wife of Captain Leyland, R. N., and the mother of an uncommonly fine boy. From Mrs. Leyland, indeed, I gained most of my information respecting the attack on London, which is here dealt with. She had been mixed up in it, and she had become deeply interested in it in all its phases, and it was soon after my return that she lent me the narrative which I have here reprinted. In order to return the manuscipt of this narrative to her and to ask her some questions arising out of it, I dined with her and Leyland one Winter evening, and it was in his smoking room later that we had some further discussion about the exciting events of the June of three years earlier.

"What happened," I asked, "after the last event recorded in your narrative?"

"Oh, the most ordinary things," she replied. "We had the three sick men transferred to the Avenger, and Winthrop brought us all home. It was on the way, by-the-by, that I promised to be put in irons for the rest of my life."

"Oh, yes! And the three sick men—"

"Were all in their right minds on the second day. They had a conference between themselves, and after that no one could get anything out of them. I don't know whether Mr. Wynyard ever took Lord Grandminster into his confidence, but he never mentioned anything to us, did he, Winthrop?"

"Never!" said Leyland, with considerable emphasis. "And no wonder!"

After a pause I put forth another question.

"There's one thing I don't understand," I said. "What did the man who called himself de Reineville and who, I imagine, was the active agent of the Three want with you all on the Island? From what Popinot said he had often taken people to the Island, but never brought them away again. I don't understand all that."

Mrs. Leyland looked at her husband. That magnificent specimen of the modern sea captain began to puff great clouds of smoke out of his pipe, and to betray signs of embarrassment.

"Neither do I," she said. "And it's one of the two things Winthrop will never talk to me about."

"What is the other?" I asked.

"About what they saw on the Island," she answered. "I suppose men never understand that curiosity is one of women's virtues, and that—"

Leyland jumped to his feet with a hasty exclamation.

"Cynthia, I'm dead certain I heard that boy howling. His nurse is gallivanting down in the kitchen, no doubt. Hadn't you better—?"

"My dear," said Mrs. Leyland, "the boy is, without doubt, as sound asleep as you will be as soon as your head touches its pillow. Why don't you say 'Get out!' plainly and bluntly? Good night, Mr. Plowden—I am sent to bed."

When his wife had departed Leyland carefully closed the door, came back to the hearth, filled his pipe, and stared at me.

"I say, old chap!" he said, "don't ever let my wife talk to you about either of those matters. It isn't good for a woman to concern herself with that sort of thing. I made up my mind long since that I never would tell her what we saw on the Island, and I never will."

"Leyland," I said, "what did you see?"

He smoked for some little time before he replied.

"Well!" he said, "we found some strange things, Plowden. You've got to remember, to begin with, that we'd simply raked the place with shell-fire from one end to the other. I never expected to see a live thing on it. Of the castle, or whatever it was, there literally wasn't a stone left standing on another. You read, in Cynthia's account, of the sound of firing after our search-parties landed?"

"Yes."

"Well, when we got near to the ruins we saw a number of things which I never want to see again. They were something like apes, with extraordinarily human-looking faces: they seemed to me to be an extremely low type of primitive man. Most of them were wounded—and we shot them off."

"I see. And as to people?"

"There had been people. Who and what they were we couldn't tell. Some of them were shattered to pieces by the shell-fire—ever seen the effect of a .47 on a crowd of people?"

"Ye-es."

"Very well then. So much for most of them. But we saw quite enough in several cases to make is certain that some of the people—men and women—had been experimented upon—sort of vivisected, you know. Help yourself to some more whiskey."

"Thanks. Well, and about the old man? By-the-by, did you see anything of the other two old men?"

"We found all three. The man whom we found alive sat on a sort of throne in what had evidently been a courtyard, or open-air audience chamber, and the other two sat one at each side of him. We thought they were all dead. One had been killed by a blow from a fragment of shell which had struck him full in the chest; on the other there was no mark. We buried the other two."

"Were they as old as the third in appearance?"

"Quite. Old as Adam."

"Leyland—as touching that old man's death on board the German warship: did you see the phenomenon which your wife describes?"

"As plainly as I see you. We all saw it. I never used to believe in anything of that sort—never used to think of such things, in fact, but I saw that, Plowden, as clearly as I ever saw anything."

"And the old man was dead?"

"Oh, well, our doctor and the German doctor argued a lot about astral bodies and so on, but he was dead as a door nail—a perfect walking skeleton, too, he was, Plowden. I'd give ten year's pay to know who that man was, what he'd seen, what—No, by Jove, I wouldn't! No, thank God, no! From searching into the unseen may Heaven preserve us!"

"So that all ends happily," I said.

"All ends happily. I say, which do you consider the finest youngster—ours, or Graham's? I only want to know so that I can tell their mothers next time they squabble about it."

THE END.

Beatrice Roberts' Famous Feet

"I adore pets! Horses, dogs and kittens. But I have no use for a pet corn."

So writes Beatrice Roberts . . . the charming Miss Manhattan.

"In these days a corn seems like a silly grievance . . . with a drug store on almost every corner and Blue-jay as easy to get as postage stamps."

Always the safest and gentlest way to end a corn, Blue-jay for 1928 offers new refinements. A creamy-white pad instead of a blue one. A more flexible disc for the awkwardly placed corn. And a new and improved package!

One plaster usually ends the corn. But even the rugged "old-timer" seldom needs more than two . . . In the new package at all drug stores. For calluses and bunions use Blue-jay Bunion and Callus Plasters.

AN OBLIGING BEAUTY DOCTOR

A Beauty Specialist Gives Home-Made Recipe to Darken Gray Hair.

Mrs. M. D. Gillespie, a well-known beauty specialist of Kansas City, recently gave out the following statement regarding gray hair:

"Anyone can prepare a mixture at home that will darken gray hair, and make it glossy. To a half-pint of water add 1 ounce of bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and ¼ ounce of glycerine.

"These ingredients can be purchased at any drug store at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. This will make a gray-haired person look twenty years younger. It does not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and will not rub off."

"Those Washday Blues"

By Mrs. Christine Frederick,
The Distinguished Authority on Household Efficiency.

AMONG the hundreds of letters of inquiry which come to my desk, probably the most frequent is, "I am thinking of buying a washing machine. What can you tell me about the XYZ Washer? Will it wash clean, and what does it cost to use it?"

Of all the many power appliances which have come into general use, I have always felt that the washing machine holds first place because it so revolutionizes what formerly was the heaviest manual task. There is more contrast between easy, effortless machine washing and the old "rub-a-dub-dub" and "boiling" than there is in old-fashioned and new-fashioned methods in other tasks. To be able to put a whole basket of soiled clothes into a tub, to press a button and go away and leave the tub rocking or swaying or spinning, to come back a quarter of an hour later and find the clothes clean—that is modern magic!

And yet a power washer will do this any day, any hour. From tests made by me on power versus hand methods, I have proved that the identical weight of wash requiring four hours hard rubbing and attendant work by hand can be replaced by just 1½ hours of pleasant agreeable overseeing—by machine. I have myself washed 20 blankets easily on a spring cleaning day, with the aid of a washer. In a family of seven it never requires more than a full hour to wash all the usual clothing. There is, frankly, no reason for "those washday blues" in any household when a power washer is so reliable, and at the present time so reasonable in cost as to be within the means of every family.

I will not discuss here the improved methods and technique which must be followed to make machine washing of greatest efficiency and done in the least time. I want to point out new trends and developments in the entire field. Take the point of size and space requirement. Only a few years ago a washer meant giving up a large section of floor space and having a very definite laundry. Today models are being so compactly made that a floor space of 24 inches is adequate for their operation. This does not mean that a well-fitted-up laundry is undesirable, but it does mean that in the modern home or contracted apartment there is still space for a washer.

Again, from the point of view of appearance, the washer which I recall, say 15 years ago, was "anything but" beautiful. It lacked design and good lines, it was bulky and generally of unattractive wood or uninteresting galvanized iron. Note the contrast today. The vogue for color which is making the kitchen the gayest room in the house, has penetrated the laundry as well. The housewife can now match her complexion in her washing machine! She may purchase washers that are blue if she is a blond, or washers that are maroon, if she is a brunette! Or she may select a machine which fits harmoniously into her kitchen, her entry or the laundry itself. In short, the manufacturer is paying as much attention to the design of the modern washing machine as other manufacturers are paying to the design and color plan of the modern motor.

Third, many of the original "principles" on which machine washing was based, have been modified or improved along the lines of increased efficiency. Thus, the old "agitator" model had a revolving (and often wooden) dolly milk stool. Today this agitator has been transformed into a much more effective feature with more force, simpler action and less danger of tearing the clothes.

Further, while the power-operated wringer is far superior and still holds a justifiable place of service, an entirely new wringing development has been perfected. This is the machine which dries the clothes by centrifugal force. That is, the machine itself, or its central cylinder spins, revolves and whirls at such a speed that water is forced out of the clothes it contains. This does away with the wringing and handling of separate pieces. Undeniably, this type of machine has a deserved place because of its quick action, fewer handlings of clothes, etc. One such machine now on the market has proved in figures that it saves 59 per cent in time over a method employing even a power wringer.

Another marked improvement in all washers is the safer concealment of moving parts. How I remember the old chains and belts of the models of 1912! Some association should prepare an exhibit of old model washing machines alongside of the new models, just as is done with autos and railway trains. Only one of the "old-timers" like myself can really weigh the marvelous advance in this particular labor-saver.

Radish Dressing
(for Green Salads).

MIX 5 tablespoons salad oil, 1 tablespoon orange juice, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, 1 tablespoon tarragon vinegar, ½ teaspoon salt, a few grains paprika and a dash of cayenne. Shake or beat well. Add ¼ cup thinly sliced radishes and serve with very cold vegetable salad.

Brussels Sprouts au Gratin.

REMOVE any wilted leaves. Pick over and wash carefully. Soak in cold salted water to remove any insects. Cook in boiling salted water. Drain and combine with 2 cups of well-seasoned white sauce. Turn into a buttered baking dish, sprinkle with ¾ cup buttered crumbs mixed with ¼ cup grated cheese. Bake in a hot oven until crumbs are browned.

Pineapple Trifle.

SOAK 2 tablespoons gelatine in ½ cup cold water. Scald 1 can grated pineapple and add to the softened gelatine. Add ½ cup sugar and 1 tablespoon lemon juice. Chill in pan of ice water. When mixture begins to congeal fold in 3 cups of cream beaten until stiff. Turn into mold and chill.

What Shall I Do With Leftover Meat?

Always a problem! To throw away leftovers is wasteful—to warm them over is monotonous. But—have you ever tried combining leftover meats with Knox Sparkling Gelatine? You'll have a meat loaf that every member of the family will eat to the last morsel without realizing it is made from leftover food. You'll have a dish fit for guests! You'll have a little secret that will help you keep up the family appetite and keep down the family budget.

Meat Loaf

Take two cups of any leftover well seasoned stock, bouillon or diluted gravy, bring to the boiling point and add one envelope Knox Sparkling Gelatine softened in one-half cup cold water. When mixture begins to stiffen, add two cups of any cold chopped meat at hand (veal, ham, beef, or chicken). Also mold in a little red or green pepper, celery, onion if desired, or parsley. Turn into a square mold first dipped in cold water and chill. Remove from mold and cut in slices for serving.

Mlle. Dalbane, the "Death Flower," Whose Lovers All Meet Tragic Ends

ous death in the company of Marthe Dalbane was related at the beginning of this series. Besides controlling Monte Carlo, the most profitable gambling resort in the world, he was a man of such wealth and power that he had twice clashed with the great European financier, Sir Basil Zaharoff, and both times defeated him.

The Prince came to the Dalbany agency, presented no card and stated that he preferred to be anonymous and wished a private interview with the head of the concern. When he saw the head, it wore such an angelic expression that he doubted if he was going to get the information he sought. The moment the door was closed she said:

"Prince Radziwill, what do you wish to know?"

"Ah!" he answered, mockingly. "Mademoiselle knows me! Marvelous!"

"Yes, we know a thing or two about you," she replied, drawing some cards from a filing cabinet. From these she read:

"Prince Leon Radziwill, eighth of the Polish line. Married 1921 to Princess Dolores Radziwill, his first cousin. Successively enamored thereafter of Liane Louvain, and lately of Mademoiselle Reinette."

"Every one knows these details," interrupted the Prince. "They have been related a hundred times."

"Wait," admonished Marthe, still reading. "This is more interesting:

"Something cruel, as the following incident attests.

"He challenged Henri Letellier before the war to a mail-coach race, from Cannes to Monte Carlo. He set out at nightfall and, driving all night, entered the principality the following dawn. He drove to the entrance of the Casino, deserted at that hour, except for a swarm of boy bootblacks waiting for the matinal players.

"He emptied his pockets of small change and dumped the coins in a chafing dish in his baggage. When he had heated the coins over the alcohol flame he threw a shower of white-hot metal into the swarm of bootblacks and held his sides with laughter while the children scrambled for the treacherous largesse and filled the air with their screams of agony."

"That is better," acknowledged Radziwill with a slight shudder. "I was very young."

"Oh, I don't judge," deprecated Marthe, and hunted another paragraph in her report:

"One evening Prince Radziwill was strolling by moonlight on the Condamine, at the foot of the rock of Monaco, in the company of Maud Loty, the actress, to whom he was paying court at the time.

"The pair had reached the spot under the 'little bridge' when a sound overhead caused them to look up. They saw a woman crawl over the parapet and throw herself into the air. Her corpse landed at their feet. Mlle. Loty could never receive the Prince again. She lay in brain fever at the Hotel de Paris for three days and recovered with a horror of Monte Carlo and of the Prince, of whom she says that he 'walks on a pavement of corpses and gold.'"

This time the Prince confessed astonishment. The tragic incident was one which he believed known only to himself. Marthe continued:

"Here is our latest note on your matters. Affair with Reinette appears to be approaching its end."

"Delightful!" cried the Prince, the mockery all gone from his voice now. "You really do know everything."

"Yes, even the kind of drugs you use," added Marthe, with the innocent deep blue stare for which she is famous.

"What!" shouted the Prince furiously. "What do you mean?"

Mlle. Dalbane did not reply, but from a secret compartment in her desk brought out a gold tray, which she placed in front of her angry caller. He gazed at the tray some time, then looked up and smiled. It contained an assortment of most of the forbidden drugs.

"Will you join me?" asked the Prince, and they each had a sniff of cocaine before getting down to business.

"I need a little exact information as to the habits and behavior of my little friend Reinette during such times as I have not been on hand to guide her," said the Prince. "Do you understand?"

"I think so," replied Marthe. "You wish to know to what degree she has been faithful to you, that you may decide justly how large a settlement to make."

Marthe was always an understanding woman when it came to dealing with a man, and this understanding deepened rapidly as her client made several calls to get the required information. One day the two Dalbany agencies wondered what had become of their beautiful chief, who had simply vanished without leaving any word. It was not till several days later that they learned her whereabouts from newspaper stories of Prince Radziwill's death from unknown causes at Monte Carlo, and in company with their boss, the "Death Flower."

How all France was startled by the tragedy and demanded that the mystery of the "Death Flower" be solved, has already been told, and also how the Monte Carlo authorities quietly and quickly banished her from their tiny principality.

Two days later, as Marthe's car was slowly working its way toward Paris, a man stopped it and showed a badge. He was a representative of the French Surete, informing Mlle. Dalbane that she was under arrest and had the privilege of continuing to Paris in her car or on a train. Marthe took the inspector with her in the car, first stopping to send a telegram to a man high up in French diplomatic circles.

A little later she received a reply bearing a signature which caused the Surete operative to bow respectfully when he was permitted to read it. She knew that the tremendous name of Radziwill added to the long list of other deaths would force the police to some sort of action, but that telegram promised hope. Just outside the gates of Paris they saw a large limousine with drawn curtains waiting.

Marthe stepped into the limousine and for some time talked with the important personage who had signed the telegram. He had passports, tickets and an order calling off the Surete man—everything arranged for her to go to South America. It was all that his influence could do for her, and he pleaded with her to go, but Marthe said that death was preferable to exile from Paris.

It was not death that awaited her, but something that a drug addict dreads almost as much—the drug cure. The police had ransacked her offices and apartment, finding a quantity of morphine, for which Judge Bacquart was able to order her confined in the prison of St. Lazare and to take the cure.

After that ordeal, which she survived, the "Death Flower" was allowed to depart and remain at liberty within the limits of Paris, pending the trial. If she is convicted the judge will solemnly impose a small fine on her as a first offender against the narcotic laws. But she has already suffered the special punishment of the drug fiend, the only torture that can be legally inflicted on anyone in civilized countries—the drug cure.

Meanwhile the "Death Flower" is forced to hold herself at the disposal of the police to help them delve into the mystery of why it is that death walks always at her elbow, and that to love this beautiful Lorelei means to die.

Soft lights are a great help when you want to be pretty. But unfortunately, daylight persists in coming. What happens to beauty then?

By daylight complexions must be naturally fine and fresh. For nearly 50 years Ivory has helped the cause of beauty.

To keep a candle-light complexion by daylight ...

Doctors say this simple care is best and safest

If a good look at your mirror makes you feel a little sad, then it is time to do something about it. Did it ever occur to you that you might not be cleaning your face thoroughly?

It isn't very hard to have a flowerlike complexion when lights are soft—it can be a simple matter of a finishing cream and a little careful make-up.

But a good energetic flood of sunlight—that is something else! In the daytime, no make-up, however clever, can really make up for the lack of a skin that is fine and fresh and charming all by itself . . . Have you that kind of skin?

Some morning when you are feeling quite brave, carry a mirror to the window and take a hard look. If you are very young, or if you are one of Nature's favorite daughters with one of those fresh, child-like skins, you can feel superior, for you are one in a hundred. But if you see pores that have relaxed, or little white spots, or black spots, or a surface that looks a little oily—then, you are one of the great majority—and it is time to do something about it.

Try this cleanliness test: Some evening, cleanse your face with any cold cream—the most costly you can buy, if you wish. Then take a slightly dampened cloth and rub it over a cake of Ivory. Then go over your face thoroughly. The washcloth will show you how much your face needs Ivory.

Perhaps you are not really cleaning your face

Do you know that lack of proper cleansing spoils more skins than anything else? Creams alone can't really clean your face. Dermatologists—doctors who specialize in the care of the skin—say so again and again until they must be nearly worn out with saying it. They say your face needs creams and soap-and-water. A good soap. We suggest Ivory Soap—and we can give you plenty of reasons for the suggestion.

Try this cleanliness test

Sometime when you come in after an active day, clean your face with cold cream—wipe it off. Then wring out a washcloth in hot water—rub it over a cake of Ivory Soap. Now go over your face with this slightly dampened cloth just to see! Look at the washcloth! Gray, Isn't it? Your face wasn't cleaned at all thoroughly by the cream alone. You needed the Ivory too!

Why Ivory is the finest kind of complexion soap

Ivory is good for your skin because it is so pure and fine. It is a perfectly blended soap. Its soft, smooth lather is clear and bubbly—without that slightly greasy "feel" that some soaps have. It penetrates the pores and relieves them of the oil and dirt which would otherwise enlarge them. (It's the unremoved oil in your pores that hardens and forms a white spot. If it catches a little point of dirt it makes a black spot.) And Ivory lather rinses off completely—leaves your skin refreshed because it is so kind and gentle.

See your skin improve

Now, if you really want a nice skin and are willing to do something about it, try this simple beauty treatment. It is not complicated, and is easily done each day. You should never go to bed without doing it completely.

At the end of the day, use cold cream—any good kind—to soften dust and make-up. Then wash your face in a warm Ivory lather, every quarter-inch of it. Rinse in warm water, then thoroughly in cold. And rub in a little more cold cream if your skin is dry.

You can see what a treatment like this will do for your skin: It cleanses it completely, it tones it up, and it lubricates it. The most expensive, faddy beauty-treatment can not do more.

Start tonight on this simplest, most reasonable quest for beauty—and watch your skin improve!
